Retract or Quit, Roosevelt Tells TVA Chairman

President Gives Dr. A.E. Morgan Till Today to Recant Charges.

Director Retorts He Won't Resign

Challenges Executive's Power to Suspend or Remove Him.

(Partial Text on Page 9.)

By Franklyn Waltman.

In the face of flat refusal by TVA Chairman Arthur E. Morgan either to retract charges he has made about his fellow-directors or to resign, President Roosevelt is expected today to take steps to remove the elderly chief of the New Deal's experiment in public power.

Mr. Roosevelt yesterday set the deadline at 2:30 p. m. today for Chairman Morgan to recant or submit his resignation. In the event he has neither by that hour the President told the TVA head he would proceed along one of two courses—either your removal or your suspension as a member of the board of the Tennessee Valley Authority." Chairman Morgan retorted that it is my judgment that my resignation at this time would not be in the public interest" and that "therefore I do not tender my resignation." He added that "I challenge any suggestion and deny the right or power to remove or to suspend me."

Morgan Won't Retract.

Morgan at a press conference subsequently said he was referring to the President's "right and power" and asserted that he would have no further communications with the White House for the present. He left the city last night for Yellow Springs, Ohio, the seat of Antioch College, which he founded. He made clear he had no intention of "resigning anything."

"Summed up, my attitude is that I do not choose to run away," the TVA chairman said with a broad smile—an infrequent facial expression for him in recent weeks—at his press conference.

It was generally expected that Mr. Roosevelt this afternoon would take his own initiative remove Chairman Morgan from the TVA board. He could, however, pursue another course, which would be to recommend to Congress that that body, by concurrent resolution, remove the TVA chairman on the basis of the record established during the three White House sessions. If Mr. Roosevelt follows that course he may suspend the chairman, pending the outcome of Congressional action.

Congress Inquiry Seen.

Should the President ask Congress to remove Chairman Morgan, it is virtually certain that there would be a Congressional investigation—probably by a joint committee of House and Senate—into the entire TVA situation and the Morgan charges, as well as those originating in other quarters. This latter would be demanded before a vote on the ouster proposal by those who have been urging a Congres-

House Rejects Parking Meter Test in Capital

By James D. Secrest.

The District supply bill was sent back unexpectedly to conference yesterday when the House rejected a Senate amendment authorizing the Commissioners to test a limited number of parking meters in the Capital.

While it debated the parking meter proposal for more than half an hour, the House accepted without a murmur of dissent the postponement of the Congressional relief investigation until mid-summer despite the appeals of labor and social welfare groups.

Chairman Collins, of the House sub-committee on District appropriations, caught unawares members who had indicated they would ask for liberalization of the relief provisions and insist that the inquiry be concluded before Congress adjourns so that a deficiency appropriation might be made if recommended.

At the same time he surprised members who planned to speak for the parking meter amendment, among whom was Representative Nichols (Democrat), of Oklahoma.

With only the parking meter amendment in dispute, the Senate will insist on another conference, Senator Thomas (Democrat), of Oklahoma, stated. No other controversial amendments will be reopened, however.

Federal Tax Robs States, LehmanSays

Governor Sees 'Threat Against 'Independent Sovereignty.'

Estate and Gift Levies Protested in Letter to Committee.

By Robert C. Albright.

A warning that States are being "starved into impotency" by Federal tapping of local revenue sources yesterday was laid before the Senate Finance Committee by Gov. Herbert H. Lehman, of New York.

The New York Governor, whom the President called "my strong right arm" before he entered the fight against the court plan last year, wrote Chairman Pat Harrison that "independent sovereignty of the States is threatened by Federal taxing policy."

Protesting particularly Federal estate and gift tax provisions of the House tax bill, Lehman asked a 50 per cent credit against the Federal estate tax on account of death duties paid to the States and territories. He asked a similar extension of credit in the Federal gift tax.

Cites Theory Of Nation.

"This country was organized on the theory and has prospered under a system of independent sovereign States with exclusive authority in many fields and with independent taxing power—a power not second to but on a parity with the Federal Government itself," Gov. Lehman wrote Harrison.

"Under such conditions, if one of two governments, having equal concurrent jurisdiction to levy a tax, actually monopolizes the field to the exclusion or near-exclusion of the other, it may follow that that other government will be destroyed or at least starved into impotency."

Tremaine Asks Tax Repeal.

Another New York State official, Morris S. Tremaine, State comptroller, meanwhile wrote Harrison that present undivided profits and capital gains taxes are "nonproductive, punitive, and are definitely destroying enterprise and opportunity for employment." Tremaine urged that Congress "repeal or drastically modify" both taxes.

At morning hearings, the committee heard two spokesmen for the United States Chamber of Commerce, Ellsworth C. Alvord, former Killing Spurs Move to Oust Mayor in Va.

Woman Blames Officers; Neighbors Tell of Mystery Car.

Leading citizens of Falls Church, Va., indignant over the killing by two town policemen of a Washington musician Sunday morning, began last night the circulation of a petition demanding the resignation of their mayor, L. P. Daniel.

A few hours before aroused leaders of the town met to draft the petition, at least five witnesses to the killing of the musician, Theodore B. Daugherty, came forward with stories of his killing that were at variance in major particulars with the account of the affair given Mayor Daniel by the officers.

Intense Feeling Cited.

Taking recognition of "the intense feeling in the town . . . as a result of the incident last Sunday morning when two of the town police shot a motorist in Arlington County," the petition, already signed by business and civic leaders, declared:

"While the sympathy of the citizens goes out to the parents of the young officers who were among the best families of the town, we feel more experienced men should comprise the police force.

"The feeling is that the two young men are most inexperienced as police officers and the citizens demand a person at the head of the town who will appoint more mature men, who know how to handle firearms and the general public."

Copy to Gov. Price.

One of the citizens at the meeting and a signer of the petition said a copy of it would be sent to Gov. James H. Price who already has begun a "personal" inquiry of the killing.

The blonde "mystery witness" to the slaying of Daugherty, reportedly, as he sped along the Lee highway in Arlington County, Va., last night accused the officers of negligence and unnecessary use of their guns.

Mrs. Cecil Rawlings, of McLean, who said her testimony was refused by investigators at the shooting scene, was located at a local down-

Anglo-Italian Pact Expected Saturday; Lithuania Cabinet Has Resigned, Reports Persist

Ex-President's Arrival Stirs Speculation in Tense Capital.

The Lithuanian Issue.

Cabinet Reportedly Quits.

By the Associated Press.

Kovno, Lithuania, March 21—Reports were circulated today that the entire Lithuanian cabinet had resigned as the internal situation continued tense over the government's submission to Poland.

Two cabinet members were known to have tendered their resignations, but official circles refused to confirm or deny a rumor that Prime Minister Jonas Tubelis had stepped out.

Foreign Minister Stasys Lazoraitis and Minister of Justice Stasys Silingas offered to resign but it could not be learned whether President Antanas Smetona had allowed them to quit their posts.

Tubelis was said to have telephoned his resignation from a sanatorium at Zurich, Switzerland, where he has been since Wednesday.

It was reported Lazoraitis offered to quit five days ago, prior to the Polish show of arms which forced Lithuania to bow to demands for "normalization" of Polish-Lithuanian commercial and diplomatic relations. The foreign minister favored reconciliaion with Poland during last week's tension.

It was suggested that disagreement among the ministers over the policy to be adopted toward Poland led to the reported cabinet resignation, but that Smetona was delaying acceptance pending completion of consultation with his advisers.

The sudden arrival of former President Aleksandras Stulginskis from his farm in the country aroused interest in political circles.

The Lithuanian Student Association declared a ten-day period of mourning in protest to the government's capitulation. The members decided to adorn their caps with black crepe until March 31.

On that date Lithuania has agreed to exchange diplomatic envoys with Poland, as demanded in the Polish ultimatum.

Difficulties Foreseen.

Warsaw, March 21 (AP).—The feeling prevailed in some quarters tonight that re-establishment of Polish-Lithuanian friendship may not experience smooth sledding all the way.

Difficulties were foreseen, at least until the Polish Legation at Kovno and the Lithuanian Legation at Warsaw begin functioning March 31.

Negotiations to put the agreement between the two countries into operation and to start border traffic were under way at Tallinn, Estonia, by the Polish and Lithuanian Ministers.

Berlin Warns Brazil to Stop Suppression of German Groups.

By the Associated Press.

Berlin, March 21.—The German foreign office organ indicated today that Adolf Hitler, in his role of protector of Germans abroad, was casting angry glances in the direction of Brazil.

Deutsche Diplomatische-Politische Korrespondenz expressed chagrin that the government of President Getulio Vargas was not showing a strong hand in suppressing anti-German measures in the outlying states. The publication said Germany had warmly welcomed Vargas' inauguration of a totalitarian regime last November 10.

(Vargas recently rejected German embassy representations against his ban on Nazi political activities in Brazil, based on his prohibition of all political parties).

The foreign office organ said measures "against Germandom and its organizations" were "extremely amazing," especially in southern Brazil. It alleged that it "is well known and never seriously contested that Germans in Brazil always have refrained from meddling with domestic affairs and have merely claimed their natural legal right to advance their racial culture and build up their organization unhindered."

Assuming that Vargas does not approve of anti-German measures, the publication said, "it is to be hoped that the President soon will become master of the situation."

It was authoritatively said that German disappointment was based on reports that organizations of Germans still retaining their citi-

Mexico City, March 21.—Two American officials of the Huasteca Petroleum Co. at Tampico today were reported seized by oil workers and held to force payment of wages claimed by the union.

The two are E. Borego, assistant manager of the Tampico terminal of the company, controlled by the Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey, and F. W. Yenny, personnel manager. Both are United States citizens, Borego being a graduate of the Colorado School of Mines.

Seized with them and detained was Benito Nayola, Mexican attorney for the company.

The three men were being held in the terminal by workers seeking to compel the company to pay wages allegedly due from March 15 to last Saturday.

The American consulate at Tampico was reported to have intervened to secure the men's release, while the matter was submitted to the State Department by the embassy here.

Detention of the three men was the second direct action taken by workers since President Lazaro Cardenas' expropriation of American and other foreign oil holdings throughout Mexico, Saturday, a group here ousted American, British and French employes from the local offices of the Mexican Eagle Oil Co., subsidiary of Royal Dutch Shell, and took possession of the place.

Anglo-Italian Accord.

By the Associated Press.

Rome, March 21.—British Embassy officials tonight asserted drafting of an Anglo-Italian friendship accord was under way as negotiations virtually were completed.

Informed sources predicted the pact, which would ease tension between the two countries, would be concluded by Saturday.

The British said main points had been agreed upon in principle and confirmed, the accord would embody:

An agreement on Mediterranean issues.

A British agreement to support recognition of Italy's conquest of Ethiopia through the League of Nations.

Troops Leaving Libya.

Meanwhile there arrived in Naples the first detachment of soldiers being withdrawn from Libya, Italian colony in north Africa, as a concession to the British.

It included almost 4,000 officers and men.

It was expected here that Britain's weight would be sufficient to lead to final solution of the issue of Italian sovereignty over Ethiopia since a number of Europe's smaller nations already have indicated they were favorable to recognition.

Complete withdrawal of Italian forces from Spain under the aegis of the nonintervention committee would be accompanied by Germany's withdrawal of her nationals fighting there, official circles believed.

Italy Expects Loans.

Informed sources said Italy would discontinue construction of certain Eritrean fortifications which might threaten traffic in the Red Sea, and therefore menace British communications through the Suez Canal.

They also said Italy and Britain would exchange Red Sea and Mediterranean military information.

No financial provisions will be embodied in the accord, it was stated, but Italy expects that the way will be opened for long-term loans from British capital for development of her empire.

Capt. Nixon Divorce Validated; Chevy Chase Girl Is Legal Wife

Lower Courts Upset on Accepting 2d Mate's Fraud Charges.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Gettysburg, Pa., March 21.—The Pennsylvania State Supreme Court today held valid a divorce granted to Capt. Thomas H. Nixon from his second wife, former show-girl, Annette Finneron. Four days after his divorce in 1935, the Army officer wed his present wife, the former Anne Cooke, of Chevy Chase, Md.

In upholding the divorce, the court reversed the decision of the county and State Superior courts, which held that Nixon's divorce was illegal on the grounds of fraud.

Capt. Nixon and his present wife have had three children since their marriage.

Claiming that Nixon had misrepresented himself as a resident of Pennsylvania and that she had not known of the divorce until she read newspaper accounts of his third marriage, the secon. Mrs. Nixon started proceedings against the divorce several months after it was granted.

Counsel for the officer, in arguing the appeal before the Supreme Court, declared Nixon had never given up his residence in Gettysburg.

Under an order from the District Court in Washington, Nixon has been paying wife No. 2 $150 a month.

Wife No. 3 broke into the limelight in January, 1935, when she helped her younger sister, Jane, to elope with the family chauffeur, George Scarlett.

High Court Asked To Let Man Bathe In Own Back Yard

By the Associated Press.

William Heller, of Easton, Conn., asked the Supreme Court yesterday to let him bathe in his own back yard.

One day in July, 1936, Heller bathed in Ball Wall Brook, which flows through his 38-acre tract. He was arrested, charged with violation of a Connecticut statute against bathing in reservoirs or tributary streams.

Heller argued the law was not intended to cover bathing by the property owner, and if it was, it deprived him of his riparian right and violated the provisions of the fourteenth amendment by abridging his citizenship rights.

The State supreme court of errors decided, however, that the act "strictly requires Heller to forego the privilege of bathing in Ball Wall Brook as a recompense he must make for the rights he enjoys as a member of organized society," and confirmed the conviction.

Vienna, March 21.—Nazi police have confiscated the passports of Siegmund Freud, 82-year-old "father of psychoanalysis," and his wife and impounded all their ready money to prevent them from leaving the country, it was revealed tonight.

Nazi police last week raided the modest Freud apartment, where the Jewish psychoanalyst is recuperating from an illness, and made a thorough search. Later they raided his publishing plant in the same building.

Because of his illness he was not informed for several days of Fuehrer Hitler's coup and annexation of Austria.

Economy Lost, Job Fight Turns To Pet Bureaus

Byrd's Move to Fix 10% Saving in Office Bill Rejected, 58-26.

Failing in an effort to write economy objectives into the Administration's reorganization bill, foes of the measure last night sought specific exemptions of selected bureaus from the President's sweeping merger powers.

The opposition earlier suffered a third major defeat when the Byrd amendment, fixing 10 per cent economies in regular expenditures as a prime aim of the program, was overwhelmingly defeated, 58 to 26.

Senator Key Pittman (Democrat), of Nevada, immediately offered an amendment to exempt the Forest service of the Agriculture Department from abolition or transfer. This is the first of a long list of so-called "pet" bureaus for which exemptions are sought. Pittman last night apparently had the votes to exempt the agency. The Administration already has privately "assured" Senators it will not be touched.

Green Lends Support.

Meanwhile, opponents of the bill obtained the support of President William Green, of the American Federation of Labor, in an apparently futile fight to send the measure back to committee for further study and hearings.

Green telegraphed Senators that the reorganization bill in its present form "is highly objectionable to the American Federation of Labor and its entire membership." He said labor "is greatly alarmed over the serious implications in this legislation."

The A. F. of L. demand for recommittal of the bill followed defeat last week of opposition attempts to provide a Congressional check on the President's reorganization powers and to maintain the civil service under three-man control.

Sweeping Powers Cited.

"The reorganization bill now pending represents a broad and sweeping delegation of Congressional authority to the executive branch of the Government," President Green said in his telegram.

"Congress ought to retain all its constitutional authority in conformity with principles of Democratic procedure and Democratic government. Power ought to be broadened and extended but never curtailed nor surrendered."

The labor federation president protested that "the usual custom of according hearings to those interested in legislation was not followed with reference to this reorganization bill." He said no hearings were held by the House committee and only "a superficial hearing" by the Senate committee.

Administration forces gained another victory yesterday when Senator Guy M. Gillette (Democrat), of Iowa, was persuaded to withdraw his amendment limiting reorganization powers by providing for House rejection by concurrent resolution of any of the President's merger proposals.

'Compomise' Proposed.

A concurrent resolution, not requiring signature of the President, would permit disapproval of White House action by a majority vote of both Houses. As the bill now stands, the President could override Congressional disapproval by a veto. Another two-thirds vote would be necessary to block any order.

Gillette said his proposal was originally designed as a "compromise" on the Wheeler amendment, requiring affirmative action by Congress before mergers took effect. Since the Wheeler amendment was defeated, Gillette said he felt it would be "nagging the Administration" to further press the issue. He said he withdrew it on request of the co-authors, Senators Prentiss M. Brown, of Michigan, and Edwin C. Johnson, of Colorado (Democrats).

Triumphantly, Senator James F. Byrnes (Democrat), of South Carolina, reorganization bill sponsor, announced that "the amendment not only has been withdrawn, but all three of the authors will vote against it if anyone else proposes it."

Byrd Makes Appeal.

Defeat yesterday of the economy amendment declaring for a ten per cent cut in the regular expenses of Government followed vain appeals by Senators Harry Flood Byrd, of Virginia; Josiah W. Bailey, of North Carolina, and Edward R. Burke, (Democrats), and William E. Borah (Republican), of Idaho.

Borah said he could see no object in reorganization unless the Administration was willing to strive for "the modest" reduction of 10 per cent.

Byrd said his amendment would exclude fixed charges of Government and would mean a saving of only $350,000,000 out of the $8,000,000,000 spent for regular and emergency activities. And Bailey pointed to the Democratic 1932 campaign pledge of a 25 per cent spending cut.

Byrnes replied that the bill already provides for a cut in expenditures "to the fullest extent consistent with the efficient operation of the Government." He said a 10 per cent reduction actually would mean a slash of $450,000,000, and cost the jobs of one out of every three Government employes.

Bailey Takes Floor.

Bailey took the floor for 45 minutes in an effort to demonstrate that every citizen is "paying for this spending" in indirect taxes. Flourishing a package of cigarettes, he said they cost 15 cents but 6 cents of that price went to the Treasury in taxes.

"It appears that the present function of business is to collect taxes from the American people—taxes you and I are afraid to levy directly," Bailey said. "We do not dare levy such taxes directly, and if we did, we would be run out of office."

The North Carolinian said the large corporations do not pay the taxes, but they come out of the pockets of consumers and employes.

"Uncle Sam collects it long before the worker can get to it," he said. He cited the case of an oil company he said pays $3,100 in taxes to every worker it employs and a soap company that pays $2,000 it wise to continue a policy which in taxes to every employe.

"Why can't we save $450,000,000?" he asked. "Why can't we save $1,000,000,000? We are spending $1,000,000,000 more this year than we were last, and I dare say we were getting along better last year than we are this year."

Roosevelt TVA Hearing Ignores Axiom About Handling a Hot Poker on the Front Porch.

By Franklyn Waltman

ALMOST 10 years ago Frank R. Kent published his colorful work on "Political Behavior," in which he set forth the axioms or universal rules of the American political game. Among his rules he listed this one: "Never handle a hot poker on the front porch."

WALTMAN.

"The thing to do with a hot poker in a political campaign," Mr. Kent quoted a political sage as advising, "is to let it lay until it cools off or take it down in the cellar where it can be handled without being seen."

President Roosevelt completely disregarded this rule in undertaking, after delaying much too long, to end the dissension within the TVA. Not only did the President grab "a hot poker" when he went after TVA Chairman Arthur E. Morgan, but he proceeded to take the "hot poker" out on the front porch to demonstrate to all the world how adept he was in handling hot pokers.

Once before Mr. Roosevelt, as Governor of New York, had a "hot poker" to deal with—the Hon. Jimmy Walker. He stepped up and grabbed it, took it out on the front porch and miraculously the poker cooled when the Hon. Jimmy suddenly resigned. Having succeeded once, Mr. Roosevelt undertook to handle the TVA poker in exactly the same way. The only thing that was wrong was that Chairman Arthur Morgan refused to resign—leaving the President holding the poker.

What to do with the Morgan poker is the question of the hour. Of course, Mr. Roosevelt must do something. After the gaudy show he has put on intermittently at the White House during the last two weeks he cannot just shrug and say "aw, let's forget it." Having brought on Chairman Morgan's defiance, or "contumacy," if you please, the President cannot now back-track. He must oust the chairman from his office—by law or without law—of else all discipline in the Federal Government completely would be broken down.

But how? If Mr. Roosevelt summarily dismisses the chairman he immediately subjects himself to a barrage of criticism of seeking to dominate the independent agencies of the Federal Government—a particularly touchy subject just now with Administrationists seeking to push through the reorganization bill. Moreover, Mr. Roosevelt, if he removes Chairman Morgan, would place himself in the position of repudiating a provision of the law which is one of his pets—namely, the provision in the TVA act that members of the board may be removed by concurrent resolution of House and Senate.

In all events, such action would be challenged in the courts and thus the issue would be kept alive for a year or two until the Supreme Court again makes known its attitude. It would be the Humphreys case all over again—and that time Mr. Roosevelt did not fare so well at the hands of the high tribunal. It unanimously ruled him wrong. Seven of the nine justices who concurred in that opinion remain on the court.

Such action by Mr. Roosevelt would confirm and give color to the suspicion that a great many persons harbor, that his real grievance against the Supreme Court, which led to his abortive reorganization scheme, was not its invalidation of the NRA or the AAA, but the restrictions which it placed on him in regard to dominating the entire Federal personnel.

Indeed, some observers believe that Mr. Roosevelt, rather than fearing another encounter with the Supreme Court on this issue, desires such a contest in the hope that it might result in a modification of the restrictions on him laid down in the Humphreys opinion—and hopes that Chairman Morgan will bring it to pass.

Be that as it may, Mr. Roosevelt has been reluctant to turn the other cheek to the Supreme Court. In substantiation of that, note his astonishing plea to Chairman Morgan yesterday to retract the charges he made about his colleagues. The implication was that if the chairman did, all would be forgiven. How in the name of heaven could the TVA continue to function efficiently under a directorate the members of which obviously deeply distrust each other, no matter how many retractions were made? But, perhaps, it was just a trap, because if Chairman Morgan had retracted he would, ipso facto, have demonstrated his total unfitness to hold a public office of responsibility.

Mr. Roosevelt has another course open to him. He may ask Congress to remove Chairman Morgan on the basis of the record made at the White House. In that event, of course, the President runs the risk of being accused of passing a "hot poker" to Capitol Hill. Such a procedure, moreover, would set a precedent recognizing his lack of authority to remove appointees in the executive branch of the Government.

But, what is more important, such action would inevitably bring about the sweeping Congressional inquiry against which Administration leaders have fought so hard, because Congress could not be expected to pronounce judgment on Chairman Morgan without any opportunity to hear him and to investigate his charges.

And suppose Congress refuses to remove Chairman Morgan? What then of the prestige of the President and of discipline within the executive branch of the Government? Anyway you look at it, the President has a hot poker in his hand. Not only did he defy the Kentian rule about "hot pokers," he fled in the face of another political axiom which is that "you cannot perform the same trick twice successfully."

House Rejects Parking Meter Test in District Budget Bill

Falls Short of Last Year.

Chairman Collins told the House that it is $489,000 under Budget Bureau estimates, $865,000 under Senate appropriations, and that the general revenue appropriations are $682,000 below those of last year.

Regardless of how the parking meter fight is settled ultimately, the appropriations figures will remain unchanged, as the Thomas amendment requires no expenditure of public funds.

If the Senate remains adamant, the amendment may go back to the House for another vote.

House rejection came on a vote of 26 to 17 late in the day, and Collins did not ask for a roll call vote.

Dirksen Fights Plan.

Representative Dirksen (Republican), of Illinois, and Representative O'Malley (Democrat), of Wisconsin, lead the fight against the amendment, while Collins and Representative O'Connor (Democrat), of New York, spoke in favor of it.

O'Malley called the amendment "a cheap, chiselling piece of nickle snatching" and demanded an investigation of "lobbying" by manufacturers of parking meters.

Several members criticized the police and the commissioners for failure to enforce the one-hour parking regulation.

"If the Commissioners bothered to look out the windows of the District Building," said O'Connor, "they could see thousands of violations of the parking regulations.

"Government employes leave their cars on downtown streets all day and in front of their apartments at night.

"I don't know whether these parking meters will solve the problem or not, but I believe they are worth trying."

O'Malley agreed that the parking regulations are not being enforced, but added:

"Of course the police may enforce them on members of Congress if tipped off by the press."

Parking Lots Needed.

Dirksen stated that the "real problem in the District is to get cars off the streets. He now is having prepared a bill to set up a system of municipally-operated parking lots in the downtown district.

"I don't know whether or not there is a racket in the making of these parking meters," he said, "but they all sell for $57 and cost only $20 to make."

Nine concerns manufacture them, he said, and 27 cities have them in varying numbers. Nine cities have tried them and then eliminated them.

Collins explained that the House conferees, anticipating objections, had reached an understanding with District officials that all of the nine types of parking meters would be tried in an area of not over four blocks.

Cites Miami's Example.

"If they don't solve the problem, we'll throw them out," he said.

Collins said that until a month ago he would have opposed their trial, but that a trip to Miami, Fla., had convinced him they are useful to persons wishing to make quick business trips into downtown sections.

Representative Dirksen was the only member who questioned the conferees' recommendation that the relief investigator be not required to report before August 1.

"That doesn't mean he cannot report any time before that date," Collins said.

Asked about a provision in the bill limiting expenditures of the $900,000 relief appropriation so as not to create a deficiency, Collins said:

"The relief expenditures don't have to be the same each month, however."

Dirksen accepted Collins' explanation in both instances without protest.

House Extends War Veterans' Family Pension

5,000 More Dependents to Receive Aid in Costly Appropriation.

The opening wedge toward legislation granting pensions to all widows and orphans of World War veterans was driven into the Federal Treasury yesterday when the House passed the latest of the long and costly series of general pension bills.

Except for one loud dissenting cry of "No," the vote was unanimous.

The bill yesterday was one offered by Representative John Rankin (Democrat), of Mississippi, awarding Government pensions to 5,000 additional families of veterans, and changing the present compensation benefits in three important respects:

Reducing the amount of liability the veteran incurred in the service before his family is entitled to a pension from 20 to 10 per cent. (Last year the disability was reduced from 30 to 20 per cent).

Eliminating the provision that a woman who married a veteran after July 1, 1931, could not claim a pension at his death.

Eliminating a provision that a widow must prove within three years her claim to a pension.

Action Was Rushed.

Cloakroom conversations yesterday revealed that the House leaders had rushed action on the Rankin $1,651,000 the first year (mounting bill which will cost the Treasury steadily thereafter) in order to forestall action tomorrow on the more expensive Gasque bill.

The latter measure, introduced by Representative Allard H. Gasque (Democrat), of North Carolina, would give a blanket award of Federal pensions to all widows and orphans of World War veterans even if the veteran's death did not result from injuries suffered in the service.

This bill would immediately add some 200,000 families to the pension list at an initial cost of $74,000,000. By 1942 this number would be about 260,000, with the cost set at $95,000,000 a year.

Recession No Obstacle.

The present business recession, at first believed by the powerful veterans' bonus lobby to be a setback to their pension program, did not deter House members yesterday in their desire to give the service organizations anything they demand.

House leaders, it was clear, urged enactment of the Rankin bill as a sop to the veterans' organizations and as a means of sidetracking the Gasque bill. The Budget Bureau had not opposed the Rankin measure but vigorously opposes the Gasque bill.

In this connection, Representative Gerald J. Boileau (Progressive), Wisconsin, declared his suspicions there was a plot against the Gasque bill as Representative Thomas Jenkins (Republican), of Ohio, asked that all disability percentages be eliminated. Representative Glenn Griswold (Democrat), of Indiana, answered that he was in favor of giving the veterans something now and the House acted at once on the assumption.

Senator Van Nuys Hints He'll Run as Independent, Ignoring Convention in Indiana.

Senator Frederick Van Nuys, of Indiana, yesterday vigorously assailed Gov. Townsend and the Indiana State administration and declared he would give "the good citizenship of Indiana a real opportunity to express themselves next November." This was regarded as meaning the senior Senator from Indiana would ignore the June Democratic convention and run as an independent.

"I have labored hard and consistently for the Democratic Party for 37 years," said Van Nuys' statement. "I will submit my record for disinterested public service and fidelity to my State, Nation and party, in comparison with the records of any one or all of that handful of self-constituted bosses who today compose the Statehouse machine."

Van Nuys and the Townsend administration became foes following the Senator's vigorous opposition to President Roosevelt's proposal to reorganize the Supreme Court.

The Senate Judiciary Committee washed its hands yesterday of the women's equal rights amendment by agreeing to report it to the Senate without a recommendation. The committee which some time ago divided 8 to 8 on the proposal voted 9 to 9 yesterday with Chairman Ashurst (Democrat), of Arizona, casting the tying favorable vote. He later explained "We just agreed to let the Senate decide."

A resolution expressing the opposition of Congress to a proposal that butter substitutes be used for table purposes in certain Federal Institutions was introduced yesterday by Representative Fred L. Diplomat or Clerk For Cherry Queen; That's the Worry

The Cherry Blossom Festival committee will decide this afternoon whether to select the queen from the diplomatic set or from employes of local retail stores.

The meeting, first since Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen placed the city blessings on the event, will be held in the District Building at 4 p. m.

It is expected that complete details for the week's celebration will be discussed by the committee today. Now that good weather prevails, the festival probably will take place early in April, members said.

Chairman of the committee is C. Melvin Sharpe, Potomac Electric Power Co. official. He announced yesterday that a date for the festival will be set pending a report by National Parks experts. Invited to today's meeting are W. M. Kochenderfer, secretary of the Hotel Association of Washington; L. Gardner Moore, hotel association president; Albert Clyde-Burton, director of recreation in the District parks, and C. Marshall Finnan, superintendent of National Capital Parks.

Board to Consider Paymaster's Case

A special retiring board, convened by order of Secretary of the Navy Claude A. Swanson, met yesterday at the Naval Hospital to consider the case of Brig. Gen. Harold C. Reisinger, paymaster of the Marine Corps, who has been under observation there since January 5.

Gen. Reisinger was sent to the hospital after he contended he was mentally incompetent to conduct his defense properly before a general court-martial called to investigate charges of irregularities in his personal traveling accounts.

Roper Forecasts Rise in Business

Secretary of Commerce Roper said last night there were signs of increased activity ahead for business.

"There is evidence of resistance to further business and economic decline," he asserted in a brief radio address. "While an immediate dynamic upturn is not to be expected, yet factors that now stimulate confidence, coupled with seasonal influences, should augment the rate of activity."

Tax

Alvord said the House bill "didn't go far enough" in modifying business taxes, but represented an improvement over present law. He urged "unshackling" of industry by removal of "fears of vindictive taxation" and the "use of our taxation as an experimental laboratory."

Osgood criticized the increase in both Federal and State gift and estate taxes in recent years. Like Lehman, he pointed to the high rates in this field of taxation, and declared they had operated to "retard the flow of capital into employment and wealth-producing enterprise."

Gov. Lehman complained of the "alarming" extent to which the Federal Government has taken over and "virtually monopolized" the State tax fields in personal and corporate income, and estate taxation as well.

"The result is," said the Governor, "that the bulk of State and local revenue is shouldered on real property and that many of the States and their localities have been forced to enact tax laws not suited to State and local use and uneconomic in their effects."

Real Estate Bears Brunt.

Lehman said the rights of the States to impose death duties are "superior" to those of the Federal Government, yet the Federal tax "fixes the ceiling for State taxes."

He said it was "unthinkable" th States would superimpose higher duties, as the proposed Fe eral estate tax would be graduat to 70 per cent.

"For every practical purpose rates of State estate taxes will limited to one-sixth of the Fede rates in the various brackets," wrote Harrison. "The proposed l assumes the States have but a o sixth right to tax estates."

Difficulty Increases.

With Federal death duties creased, and credit for State ta decreased under the House p posals, States wil be left in "a l favorable condition than they n find themselves," Lehman c tended.

He warned that States are countering increasing difficulty devising revenue means for th own financing and those of th municipal and political subdivisio and argued that State services just as important and beneficial those rendered by the Federal G ernment."

Finlly, he admonished that effect of existing estate tax ra and those proposed in the meas before you will be to break sizeable estates and require payment of taxes out of cpital."

"No doubt the need for rever will be as great in future years at present," Lehman concluded. is wise to continue a policy wh will immediately secure additio revenue dollars at the expense future years?"

Group Health Scores Refusal Of Consultation

Policy Attributed to D. C. Medical Society in Heart Case Assailed.

The District Medical Society last night was asked to repudiate a policy of refusing direct consultations between its members and Group Health physicians. W. C. Kirkpatrick, president of the Group Health Association, said the policy is "inhumane" and "discredits the medical profession," and wrote Dr. Thomas E. Neill, president of the society, that it was "inconceivable" he had taken such an "autocratic stand."

The latest charges in the bitter controversy between the G. H. A. and the medical society came after a G. H. A. staff physician, according to Kirkpatrick's letter, attempted to call into consultation a Medical Society member in the case of a patient seriously ill with a heart ailment.

Attending a patient in the Belle Haven Convalescent Home, with coronary thrombosis, Dr. Richard H. Price, G. H. A. physician, Sunday requested consultation with a prominent local heart specialist, Kirkpatrick's letter states.

Consultation Held Refused.

The specialist, according to the letter, informed Price that Medical Society rules would not permit him to enter such consultations. He was quoted by Dr. Price as stating that Dr. Neill had ruled that no member of the Medical Society could render any service in the presence of a G. H. A. doctor and that any "consultation" between the two doctors must be confined to formal notes or telephone conversation.

The Medical Society member, according to a G. H. A. official, examined the patient yesterday morning and later reported to Dr. Price, who was not present during the examination.

Contact between Dr. Price and the heart specialist probably took the form of a written statement, it was suggested by Dr. Francis X. McGovern, of the Medical Society. G. H. A. officers said last night that the thrombosis sufferer was still considered Dr. Price's patient, and that G. H. A. would either pay the heart specialist directly for his services or finance payment by the patient.

6,000 Involved.

The situation, according to Kirkpatrick, gives the G. H. A. "the gravest concern for the welfare of 2,500 members of our association and their 3,500 dependents."

"I feel sure," the letter to Dr. Neill concludes, "that a gross misunderstanding has taken place as it is inconceivable that you, as president of the District Medical Society, would take such an autocratic stand in committing the medical profession to an inhumane policy."

Dr. Neill last night declined to comment on the letter except for the assertion, "We are simply abiding by our constitution."

Addressed to Dr Neill in his capacity as president of the society, the letter is expected to come up for discussion at the meeting of the medical body tomorrow night.

1,250,000 Held All Houses U.S. Actually Needs

Rufus Lusk Tells Building Officials 2,000,000 Is 'Social' Quota.

Rufus Lusk, secretary of the Building Owners and Managers Association of the District, said yesterday that the housing shortage in the United States is less than 1,250,000 dwelling units.

Lusk, addressing the conference of building officials at the Willard Hotel, declared that estimates which place the housing shortage at 2,000,000 units treat housing needs in "a social sense," rather than in terms of actual purchasing power.

He said that if 2,000,000 housing units were constructed "overnight," it would leave 10 per cent of all city and town dwellings vacant.

In Washington, Lusk stated, a total of 22,564 dwelling units were built from 1931 to 1937, while the city's population was increasing by 141,000 persons.

One new unit for each 6.1 increase in population, he said, would theoretically result in a shortage in Washington, but "as a matter of fact there is no shortage in this city.

"Vacancy in apartments in old buildings is 3.67 per cent and in old and new buildings combined is close to 5 per cent. Since Washington is a resort town, ordinarily our vacancy should go down in the winter, whereas throughout this winter it has gone up month by month.

"The number of old houses available for rent is increasing every day, and the number of new houses finished and for sale is 1,020, or within 500 of the peak in 1927."

More than 75 building officials gathered for the first session of the five-day cnoference. Dan I. Sultan, engineer commissioner for the District, wlecomed delegates at the morning session.

Congressman Blames Crash on Taxicab's Cutting Him Off.

Mrs. Ulysses S. Guyer, 60, wife of Representative Guyer, 65, of Kansas, was slightly injured yesterday when a car driven by her husband collided with a streetcar on Pennsylvania avenue near Thirteenth street.

The police report stated Representative Guyer was driving east on Pennsylvania avenue and started to make a U-turn "ten feet west of the loading platform on the south side."

The streetcar with which it collided was driven by Russell Kackley, 37, of 2214 First street northwest, and was also going east on Pennsylvania avenue.

According to police, Representative Guyer said a taxicab "cut him off," forcing him to stop suddenly.

Mrs. Guyer, who received a minor cut over the right eye, refused hospital treatment and immediately returned to her home in the George Washington Inn.

No charges were placed. The case will be presented to the Corporation Counsel's office in the next few days, police said.

Copeland Sure Group Will Act On Lunacy Bill

Executive Hearing Develops Only Differences on Phraseology.

Senator Copeland (Democrat), of New York, predicted that a bill proposing modernization of the District's lunacy proceedings will be reported favorably to the Senate District Committee following an executive hearing yesterday.

"The only differences," he said, "were over phraseology. Everybody as agreed that this barbarous system the District now has should be scrapped and that a commission of physicians and a lawyer should pass on lunacy cases."

The bill provides that two doctors out of a panel of eight designated by the United States District Court shall serve three months with a full-time attorney on the commission, subject to the court.

Senator Copeland emphasized that substitution of commission hearings for open court proceedings would not endanger the rights of all parties to trials by jury and at the same time would avoid stigma of open court trials.

Three other District bills were considered by the sub-committee and two will be reported with trifling changes, Copeland said.

The two approved, with modifications, are the beauty shop and barber regulatory bills passed by the House.

Whitney Stole While He Was Exchange Head

Bankrupt Broker Testifies to Six-Year Series of Peculations.

By the Associated Press.

New York, March 21.—Richard whitney, 49, head of the Bankrupt Wall street brokerage firm of Richard Whitney & Co., admitted at a hearing today that his peculations "presumably" went back as far as 1932—at a time when he was president of the New York Stock Exchange.

He said his brother, George Whitney, a partner in J. P. Morgan & Co., came to his rescue with a personal loan of $1,082,000 last November when he was in serious financial straits, but that a piling up of difficulties led to the ultimate collapse of his firm.

Whitney Tells Reasons.

Intermittently reddening as he testified, the gray-haired financier, who was expelled from the stock exchange last week after he pleaded guilty to two grand larceny indictments, took sole blame for the crash.

Among the major reasons he cited were:

An attempt to "preserve the value" of 139,400 shares of Distilled Liquors Corporation.

Depreciation in all market securities, including those of Distilled Liquors.

Interest charges that had to be paid.

Contributions to Florida interests.

Withdrawal of money for the living expenses of partners in the firm.

The big, broad-shouldered witness, five times president of the New York Stock Exchange, said he borrowed the million dollars from his brother to redeem securities originally in the gratuity fund of the stock exchange.

Took Exchange Money.

Flushing and nervously twisting a paper clip, Whitney said he had misappropriated the stock exchange fund, pledging the securities to the Corn Exchange Bank for a loan.

When the gratuity fund committee demanded return of the securities last November, he said, his brother came to his aid.

Whitney denied he was "shielding" any of his associates in the investigation of his firm's irregularities.

Assistant State Attorney General Ambrose V. McCall questioned him closely about the so-called "control account" into which securities from clients' accounts were transferred after it was created on February 16, 1937.

"I know you are not attempting to avoid responsibility," McCall said. "All I want to get at is this—who helped you in this?"

"No one," Whitney replied. "No one in the world had anything to do with opening that account except myself. No one suggested it to me."

The broker, once regarded as one of the most steadfast and one of the "safest" men in Wall street, admitted that transferring his clients' securities to the "control account" would conceal a possible deficit.

"That is unusual bookkeeping, isn't it?" McCall asked.

Whitney's neck crimsoned. "It was improper," he said bluntly, but denied that he set up the control account to hide insolvency. "That was not in my mind," he said.

The financier admitted that a questionnaire he had filed with the stock exchange early this year concerning the financial status of his firm contained "many, many false statements."

"When were you first pressed for money so that you used securities of customers as collateral for loans?" he was asked.

"I don't remember."

"Was it as far back at 1932?"

"Presumably," Whitney said.

"You never discussed the situation with anyone?"

"No. All authorization for the use of securities improperly was made by me."

Whitney's next scheduled appearance was set for tomorrow, when he will be required to submit to a psychiatric examination in Criminal Courts Building—a procedure made necessary by his plea of guilty of grand larceny.

The broker will be sentenced March 28. He faces a possible maximum of 20 years in prison.

House Votes to Wire D. C. Court for Sound

The House yesterday passed the Hobbs bill providing for installation of sound-recording equipment in one of the courtrooms of the United States District Court in Washington as an experiment. The bill now goes to the Senate.

Representative Hobbs (Democrat), of Alabama, said he believed the recording of testimony and argument would expedite appeals and make them less costly. If the District experiment is successful, he will move to extend the system to all District courts.

Hull 'Horrified' By Bombing of Spain Civilians

Follows French-British Plea by Individual U. S. Statement.

By the Associated Press.

Gen. Franco's air bombardments of Barcelona brought from Secretary of State Hull yesterday an emphatic expression against such methods of warfare.

The Secretary voiced "a sense of of horror" at the air raids, in which he said the loss of life among innocent non-combatants was perhaps greater than ever before in history.

In a formal statement read to his press conference, he said he felt he was speaking for all Americans.

His action followed closely the joint appeal of Britain and France to Franco to stop bombardments of civilian populations. Nevertheless, Hull indicated his move was individual and not associated with that of the other two powers. There was no indication at the State Department that the air raids would be the subject of a diplomatic representation to the Spanish insurgent leader. Hull's statement:

"Reports from Barcelona leave no doubt of the appalling loss of life among civilians, men, women and children, as a result of the recent air raids.

"I have on several occasions stated the position of this Government with respect to the bombing of civilian population from the air. This position is based first on consideration of humanity, and secondly on the consideration that no theory of war can justify such conduct.

"On this occasion, when the loss of life among innocent noncombatants is perhaps greater than ever before in history, I feel that I am speaking for the whole American people when I voice a sense of horror at what has taken place at Barcelona, and when I express the earnest hope that in the future civilian centers of population will not be made the objectives of military bombardment from the air."

Bishops' Plea Attacked.

An admonition to the 61 Protestant bishops who have requested the Catholic Church to use its influence in stopping civilian killings in Spain that they had signed "a statement of probable untruth" was made yesterday by Dr. Joseph T. Thorning, Mount St. Mary's College professor. Dr. Thorning, who has written many articles and made radio speeches on the Spanish situation, also denied that he was a spokesman for the Catholic Church.

The statement in question was released Sunday in New York by the American Friends of Spanish Democracy. With the Right Rev. Henry St. George Tucker heading the list of signers, the document maintained "that we feel sure that you (the Catholic Church) do not share the expressed view of a man who, claiming to be your spokesman, says with callousness incredible in one of his calling, that 'the day of the noncombatant has vanished.'"

Executives of the Friends of Spanish Democracy said that the "spokesman" referred to was Dr. Thorning.

Dr. Thorning's formal answer given by him to The Post yesterday follows:

"It will be a tragic humiliation for the 61 bishops of the Methodist and Protestant Episcopal churches of the United States to discover that they have, no doubt unwittingly, signed their names to a statement of probable untruth. My record on the Spanish question, which is public and honorable, will show that I claim to be a spokesman for no one but myself as well as for what I personally witnessed in Spain.

"I challenge the executives of the so-called American Friends of Spanish Democracy to produce from the record a single speech or radio address of mine which makes either of the claims they mention.

"It seems strange that such concern should now be registered by these clerics over the unfortunate deaths of hundreds of civilians in the course of a military bombing in view of their silence when 15,000 priests and religious workers were being murdered under the regime of the Spanish leftists.

"It is strange, also, in view of their calling, that in the letter no mention is made of any effort on their part toward persuading the Barcelona government, with which they seem so sympathetic, to permit freedom of religion and public worship in leftist hands.

"The advocates of the Barcelona regime would do well to learn how to lose gracefully."

Dr. Thorning issued his statement from the college at Emmitsburg, Md.

Germany Plans Plebiscite Drive

Berlin, March 21 (AP).—The gigantic propaganda machine of the Nazi party was mobilized today for a whirlwind campaign for the April 10 plebiscite on Austrian-German union.

The goal is to achieve for Aitler an indorsement in both Germany and her new province that will be as close to 100 per cent as possible.

Propaganda Minister Paul Joseph Goebbels will fire the opening oratorical gun Wednesday.

Hitler himself will campaign, particularly in his native Austria.

Informed Nazis predicted the new Reichstag for Greater Germany, also to be elected on April 10, would hold its first session in Vienna.

Problems of Germans in Czechoslovakia and other issues outside of Germany, including possible moves in the Free City of Danzig and colonial demands, have been shelved for the time being in favor of concentration on the plebiscite campaign.

Franco Reports New Successes In Drive to Sea

By the Associated Press.

Hendaye, France (at the Spanish Frontier), March 21.—Spanish insurgents today reported new successes in eastern Spain but the government insisted their drive toward the Mediterranean had been slowed.

Official dispatches from Barcelona said enough government reinforcements had been brought up "to take care of the situation."

Government troops established a defense line outside the village of Torrevelilla, 18½ miles from the Catalan border.

West and north of this village, insurgents said Gen. Franco's legions took control of a triangular area pointed by Torrevelilla, Calanda and Alcaniz.

Within this triangle, they reported, some villages still contained a number of government militiamen and mopping up activity was underway.

Barcelona asserted Franco's army on the eastern front had 150,000 men. It was charged there were more than seven foreigners in that force to every Spaniard.

(British in Barcelona were advised by their consul-general to evacuate the city Wednesday. The government capital was bombed heavily last week.

zenship had been dissolved or subjected to repressive measures.

It was believed here that Vargas was not fully informed of what is happening in outlying districts, hence the appeal by the foreign office organ.

(Brazil has a large German population, some 154,000 Germans entering the country in the period 1884-1933.)

Some circles said Germany valued Brazil's friendship too highly to resort immediately to a sharp diplomatic protest against what was regarded here as an unfortunate misapprehension among Brazilian authorities of the aims of German organization in Brazil.

A hope was expressed that explanations in high Brazilian quarters may result in a "better appreciation" of the German point of view.

Papers Warn of Fascists.

Buenos Aires, March 21 (AP).—The German foreign office's expression of dissatisfaction with anti-German measures in Brazil today directed attention to recent warnings South American newspapers have sounded against Fascist nations.

A few days ago the Brazilian government announced discovery of a Fascist plot against President Getulio Vargas and his regime.

In Buenos Aires the newspaper Critica declared European Fascist states have "a plan of conquest by arms" in Latin America.

It said Brazilian integralistas—Fascists—were aided by money from the "Italian and German embassies" and said throughout South and Central America Nazi tactics of "penetration, interference and intimidation" were general.

Large German colonies were pointed out in southern Brazil and southern Chile, as well as a heavy Italian concentration in Brazil's state of Sao Paulo.

Critica declared one method of Nazi and Fascist propaganda was to stir South American working men's hatred against North American and British capital which now represents 83 per cent of the foreign capital invested in South America.

The newspaper called this propaganda "against English and Yankee imperialism" untrue since "Nazi countries have reduced wages and living standards, while English and Yankee capitalism in their home countries pay workmen wages of $5 a day."

King Zog's Sisters Sail Wednesday

New York, March 21 (AP).—The three Princesses Zogu of Albania are cutting short their American tour because of a change in the date of their brother's wedding.

Fiak Konitza, Albanian minister to the United States, announced today the princesses would sail Wednesday on the Queen Mary.

Freud's Money, Passport Taken By Nazi Police

Austria

Drink Brother of Mine! Leave All Your Sorrows at Home," at suburban wine festivals.

This epitomizes as much as anything the subdued, if more purposeful spirit that traditionally joyful Austrian capital has gained from her short Nazi rule.

You don't see many smiles. Faces are more serious, there are too many arrests and suicides for laughter.

Movies Mostly of Hitler.

Political uncertainty of previous years has disappeared, but uncertainty remains over coming currency measures and among the Jews.

Vienna's 90 main motion picture houses preferred American films when they could get them, but today only one American production was shown at two theaters and a French picture at another.

Business has slowed up considerably.

Most Jewish stores still are open, but sales almost are nil in many. Some have been taken over by the Nazi business organizations others display signs showing Jewish ownership.

"Voluntary" Donations.

The wealthier Jews whose dreams now are of the United States are being asked for "voluntary" contributions to the Nazi party.

One offered a solicitor 100 schillings (formerly $18.90) but 1,000 shillings was demanded.

The German mark has not replaced the schilling yet, but there is concern about possible fluctuations when it does. Bourse trading is apathetic.

Some foreign industrial orders are being canceled, but apparently in no great volume.

There has been a swift exodus of foreigners. A number of American students obeyed parents' instructions by cable and telephone to return home immediately.

Tourist trade has dropped sharply, but it is hoped German tourists will compensate for the expected summer slump of British and American visitors, especially at the famous Salzburg music festivals.

Coffee houses, a Viennese trademark, have been affected seriously—some are almost empty, some are overcrowded with uniformed Nazis and soldiers.

Thousands of lawyers and other functionaries are spending their nights poring over German laws and regulations.

Consulates are packed with hopeful visa seekers.

There are fewer flower stands in the streets, but hawkers are doing a big business in swastika emblems and pictures of Hitler.

Soldier for Every Girl.

There are books and maps showing Austria and Germany united. Crowds gather before each and somebody invariably points a finger at Czechoslovakia, jutting into the new Reich like a sore thumb.

One hears fewer Hitler greetings than a week ago.

Soldiers fraternize everywhere.

Beggars are disappearing, except for a handful persisting in remaining at their old posts. They are soon to disappear entirely.

Commodity prices show little change—coffee still retails at $2.50 a pound, butter is 64 cents, sugar 13 cents and beefsteak 60 cents a pound.

Few foreign newspapers are admitted, and these are seized eagerly.

Every foreigner must answer scores of times: "What do other countries think about it?"

Church attendance is increasing except in Nazi-occupied synagogues. A sexton of a Jewish cemetery said previously burials averaged four to six a day; now there are 20 to 30 a day.

Mexico

the expropriation the Associated Press reported.

[In a long telephone conversation with Ambassador Josephus Daniels at Mexico City, Secretary Hull expressed the United States Government's serious concern over the possibilities that might arise from the seizure.

Silver Buying Goes On.

[He also told Daniels of his hope that some adjustment of the differences resulting from the expropriation might be made on the basis of fairness to all concerned.

[Secreary Morgenthau said, meanwhile, that the expropriation had not affected the Treasury's purchase of Mexican silver. He added the Treasury had agreed to buy another 5,000,000 ounces of Mexican silver in March, the same quota that has been taken for more than a year.—Editor's note.]

Living costs soared in the wake of financial dislocations caused by the president's action and a flight from the paper peso developed in Mexico City.

Long queues formed in front of the Bank of Mexico to exchange paper pesos for silver. The bank, anxious to restore public confidence in the paper peso, announced it would change all paper presented for silver.

[The possibility Mexico would take a leaf out of Germany's bank book and institute a system of "blocked pesos" was suggested, the Associated Press reported.

[Foeign exchange dealings were suspended by the Central Bank of Mexico at the same time that expropriation of the $400,000,000 foreign oil industry was announced last week. Other banks followed suit.

[Banking quarters said it was understood the government contemplated establishing two rates for the peso-dollar exchange.

[One, probably in the neighborhood of 3.60 pesos to the dollar, would be for the purchase of prime materials and heavy machinery for Mexican industry, it was said.

[The other would be considerably higher, for the purchase of luxuries and sending capital abroad for "unnecessary purposes."

[From Vicente Lombardo Toledano, chief of the Confederation of Mexican Workers, came a report the oil industry was "working like a clock." Ramon Beteta, undersecretary for foreign affairs, declared "if the country backs Cardenas we are across the line."

[The first job of the new seven-man petroleum board, jointly representing the government and labor, appeared to be to find foreign markets for Mexico's oil.

[Until the markets are established, there was a likelihood of reduced production, an authoritative spokesman said.

[Heretofore 68 per cent of the Mexican production was exported.

[Oil men said 17 per cent of the world's tanker tonnage was "free"—not owned or leased by the 17 United States and British companies involved in the expropriation move.

[Mexico would have to count on some of that 17 per cent to transport her oil to foreign purchasers.

[Ousted oil executives watched to learn whether the government, on the basis of purely domestic sales, could meet this week's payrolls.

[Business quarters said the government, with January and February receipts totaling less than 50,000,000 pesos and monthly payrolls of 10,000,000 pesos for public works alone, hardly would be able to contribute to make up any deficit.

Swiss to Defend Freedom to Last

Berne, Switzerland, March 21 (AP). The Swiss Parliament today roared unanimous approval of a government declaration that Switzerland would defend her independence "to the last drop of blood" if her neutrality were violated.

The declaration came in a statement, read before a joint session of the legislature, in which Germany, France and Italy were said to have assured Switzerland her neutrality would be respected.

The statement covered the policy with which the government received German annexation of Austria.

'Neutral Belt' In Europe Held Poland's Aim

Formation of a "neutral belt" from the Baltic to the Black Sea will be advanced with settlement of the Polish-Lithuanian dispute, Count Jerzy Potocki Polish Ambassador, stated yesterday.

Germany's expansion, directed "toward Central, rather than Eastern Europe," has no direct bearing upon Poland, he added. The proposed bloc, however, would be a neutral strip separating Germany and Russia.

Exchange of diplomatic representatives between Warsaw and Kevno governments, ending a feud that has existed for 18 years, should materially strengthen the understanding between Finland, Estonia, Latvia, Poland and Rumania, the ambassador indicated. The "neutral belt" is being built on an economic framework, he said.

Polish boundaries are "absolutely fixed," Potocki asserted, adding that his country has no designs on the terriory of any of its neighbors, including Lithuania. He declared "the Lithuanian people want to have their state. This is their right and here, speaking in the name of the Government of Poland, we respect this right."

However, the Lithuanians have formed a "stumbling block" to good relations among States of the Eastern Baltic since 1920, Potocki declared. The closed Polish-Lithuanian frontier and the Lithuanian claim that the city of Wilno is their capital constituted a "dangerous" problem, in Potocki's view. Therefore, he said, the recent resumption of diplomatic relations (brought about when a Polish army massed on the Lithuanian frontier) is a development of "major importance." This is "a settlement for peace," he maintained.

Poland chose last week to force the issue, Potocki declared, because "we wanted to settle the Lithuanian question without interference from any foreign power." Although he did not refer to the Austrian crisis by name, he said that "we chose the moment psychologically—there was no interference."

The ambassador held that "Poland did not want to humiliate Lithuania" but is interested in carrying out the idea of "a federation of Baltic states including Lithuania which would complete the idea of a neutral belt from the Baltic to the Black Sea."

Potocki denied truth of rumors that Poland and Germany had come to an understanding over the disposition of the Lithuanian port of Memel, one-time German city. He also anticipated no difficulties with Germany over the Free City of Danzig—that question is "settled," he said.

Pointing out that Hitler has renounced all desire to change the boundaries of the Polish Corridor in favor of Germany, Potocki declared that "Hitler is a very honest man." The envoy asserted that he did not think Hitler planned direct aggression toward Czechoslovakia.

Asked if the Polish government would permit passage of Russian troops across its territory in case of a German-Czech war, Potocki replied that "we would not permit any foreign troops to cross our soil."

Potocki called recent anti-Jewish riots in Poland as "local" disturbances.

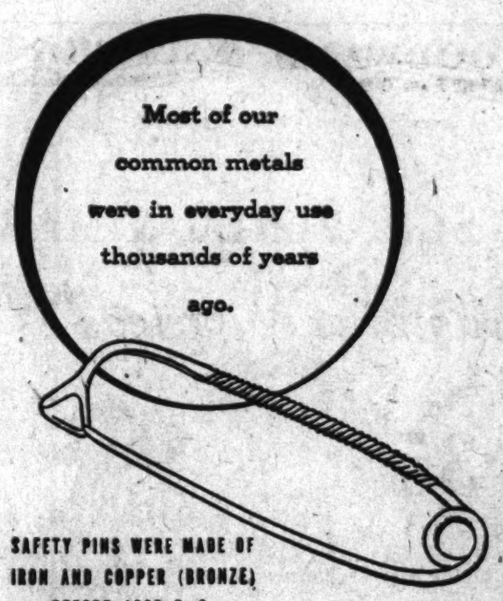
ALUMINUM
IS CHEAP BECAUSE IT WAS DEVELOPED
THE AMERICAN WAY



Most of our common metals were in everyday use thousands of years ago.
ALUMINUM
1 POUND
In only fifty years, aluminum has been made so plentiful and cheap that it can work side by side with other metals.

FACTS ABOUT ALUMINUM INTEREST EVERYBODY

The American way is to create something useful to everyone and make a lot of it, getting the price down so low that everyone can buy. Working that way, an industry can't help growing.

If we had been satisfied to make only a little aluminum, its price might still be several dollars a pound instead of 20 cents.

In fifty years, starting from scratch, aluminum has been made a common metal of everyday usefulness—right up alongside other metals, which had a head start of thousands of years.

The reason for this rapid growth has been the freedom of incentive which is the birthright and challenge of American industry. In this instance it has been accomplished in spite of the difficulties of getting aluminum out of its ore in a country where the raw materials and the electric power needed for the process are very widely separated.

Research, development and constructive salesmanship have played their part in making the United States the greatest peace-time consumer of aluminum in the world.

House Passes Big Navy Bill By 292 to 100

31 Republicans Vote to Authorize 46 New Fighting Ships.

By Sidney Olson.

By a 292-to-100 vote, the House of Representatives yesterday jerked the rollers from beneath the President's $1,121,546,000 big Navy program, heading it down the ways toward a Senate launching.

The voting line-up was:

AGAINST—Democrats, 32; Republicans, 56; Progressives, 7; Farmer-Labor, 5. Total, 100.

The bill authorized, but did not appropriate for:

Three new battleships, which, plus the four now ordered constructed, would make total fleet strength of 18.

Two aircraft carriers; total strength, 8.

Eight new cruisers; total strength, 47.

Twenty-five destroyers; total, 147.

Nine submarines; total strength, 58.

The bill authorizes a 20 per cent increase in the United States Navy's fighting fleet, for a total of 46 new warships and 22 auxiliaries—the latter including five destroyer tenders, three submarine tenders, four large seaplane tenders, seven small seaplane tenders and three repair ships.

The bill authorizes 3,000 fighting planes as the Navy's minimum strength; authorizes building of a dirigible and sets aside $30,000,000 for experimental purposes, much of the latter for torpedo boat and aircraft experimentation.

Senate Fight Ahead.

A serious Senate fight against passage of the bill appeared directly ahead. A number of Senators, particularly members of the old munitions committee bloc, have already announced themselves against naval expansion at this time. Senator Robert M. LaFollette, jr. (Progressive), of Wisconsin, has declared for expenditure of defense money for useful works projects instead, and Senators William E. Borah, Idaho, and Hiram W. Johnson, California, both Republicans, are expected to line up against it. Yesterday Senator George McGill (Democrat), Kansas, and almost invariably an Administration supporter, said he was "inclined against" the bill.

Chairman David I. Walsh (Democrat), of Massachusetts, of the Naval Affairs Committee, will begin hearings Friday on the measure. Numerous witnesses are expected to appear.

Move to Recommit Losses.

The recommitment motion, made yesterday by Representative Ralph E. Church (Republican), of Illinois, asking that the measure be returned to the House Naval Affairs Committee with instructions to strike out of it the three-battleships authorization, was voted down 276 to 114.

Following passage yesterday, the usual flood of post-mortem statements poured out to the press, with particular attention devoted to one by Representative Maury Maverick (Democrat), of Texas, big Navy opponent, who declared:

"The Nation is to be congratulated on having at least 100 representatives far-sighted enough to see that the passage of the Navy bill is a gesture toward war in the Far East.

15 Residents of Capital Draw 'Sweeps' Tickets Worth $2,300

Yesterday's Irish Sweepstakes drawing brought 15 Washington area residents promises of $2,300 apiece and hopes of a lot more.

One ticket on Colleen, the horse which ran second in the Grand National last year and is rated 18 to 1 to win this year, is held by Henry C. Lewis, 1866 Wyoming avenue northwest, and his sister, Miss Annie Lewis. Another is held by Frank E. Dopp, Treasury Department architect, who lives at the Kennedy-Warren Apartments.

When Peter Schaming got the news yesterday that he had drawn a ticket on Davy Jones, he didn't even bother to inquire if the horse would run in the Grand National. He turned to Ralph Clifton, a paperhanger, who was repairing a wall in his apartment at 1421 Columbia road northwest, and said, "If I get anything out of this, I'll give you $50."

Wife Watches Waiter.

Then he called the friend from whom he had bought the ticket and reminded him of their unwritten agreement that the friend would get half of the winnings.

So unless Schaming, a waiter at the Occidental restaurant, hits the $150,000 grand prize, he won't make much on his ticket. His wife says she's going o keep her eye on him.

George A. Brennan, 52, of 1752 Columbia road northwest, said:

"I'm the kind that never builds on anything till I get it in my hands." An employe of the American Building Association, his ticket is on Bell Boy and will bring him $150,000 if the horse comes in first, $75,000 if it runs second and $50,000 if it's third.

"Salt It," His Plan.

Francis L. Bourne, retired businessman, of 2129 Florida avenue northwest, was the most laconic of all the winners. What will he do with the money? "Salt it!"

Lewis and his sister, elderly couple, who share a ticket on Colleen, were standing on their front steps at 1866 Wyoming avenue northwest when a reporter arrived. They went in the house and locked the door, remarking "We do not wish to be interviewed."

Harry W. Proctor, of the McReynolds Apartments, procurement officer for the Federal Housing Administration, who drew Irvine, pondered two ambitions. His $2,300, he said, will go either to establish him in practice of law after graduation from the National University in June or to further a career in the Foreign Service, for which he prepared at the University of Southern California.

Truman Conley, 2142 I street northwest, picked Reinsured, a nonstarter who nevertheless will earn him $2,300.

Other tickets were drawn by Philip Kousen, 229 Pennsylvania avenue southeast, and John Robinson, 1630 North Veitch street, Arlington, Va.

Tickets held by Washingtonians represent part of $8,000,000 to be distributed around the world as a result of the twenty-third drawing of the Irish Hospital Sweepstakes. Twenty nurses yesterday pulled 1,264 names, of which 699 were American, from the revolving drum, assuring each $2,302 and a chance to win $150,000 apiece when the Grand National Race is run at Aintree March 25.

Americans drew 55 per cent of the major prizes, collected 51 of the 80 tickets on the first five favorites and 13 of the 18 tickets on Royal Mail, prime favorite.

40,000 of Foe CutOff, Chinese Red Chief Says

Japanese Fed by Plane in Shansi; Defenders Recross River.

By the Associated Press.

With the Chinese Red Army in Central China, March 21.—The commander of the Chinese Red Army today asserted 40,000 Japanese troops in southern Shansi Province were cut off from their supply bases and in greatest danger of defeat since the Chinese-Japanese war started.

The red commander, Yu Chengtsao, drew a grave picture of the Japanese military position in Shansi where forces have been moving south toward the red capital, Sianfu.

Yu recounted a series of red victories in the past month which, he said, put the Japanese in a precarious position.

Fed By Planes.

Japanese troops in southern Shansi have been fed for the past six days with food dropped from planes, Red military reports said. Their mountainous communication lines eastward along the Peiping-Hankow Railway were cut by 30,000 Red Chinese troops.

In two places behind the Shansi lines Chinese troops of Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek cut another railway, leaving the Japanese severed from all supply bases.

Three Japanese transport columns, attempting to take supplies to the beleaguered army, were annihilated as they struggled through Shansi mountain passes lined with Red snipers.

Meanwhile, Gen. Chiang's armies were reported by the Reds to have recrossed the Yellow River northward in four places, pushing back Japanese attempting to unite their conquests in northern and central China.

Maitre d'Hotel ..... George Dobbs

It is a gay, tuneful and slightly risque musicalized play that Rowland Leigh, librettist, and Cole Porter and Robert Katscher, composers, have fabricated from the distinctly continental stage and screen comedy of "By Candlelight." Revealed for the first time in Washington on the stage of the National Theater last night, the new John Shubert production, starring Clifton Webb, Lupe Velez and Libby Holman, met with the hearty approbation of a near-capacity audience quite obviously "starved" for this type of entertainment. "You Never Know" is the first musical offering of the current season of touring attractions in the Capital, its only predecessor in its field having been the one-night "command performance" of "Between the Devil."

"You Never Know" is a capricious piece, fashioned on the familiar plot device of the butler and maid who are mistaken—principally by themselves—for a wealthy baron and the wife of a rich business man. It possesses an inescapable European flavor and indulges in innuendos and rather definite implications that fall, perhaps, a little too much on the side of the ribald, but still compound a coherent and laughable farce of what might happen in the establishment of a loose-living young man, whose conquests of the opposite gender are notorious.

Adheres to Play.

The pattern of the play has not been greatly altered from the form of the original comedy. Rowland Leigh, as a matter of fact, has turned in a skillful chore in his adaptation of a farce that possessed musical comedy potentialities that strangely enough never before have been perceived. To the requirements of a crisply humorous tale, Cole Porter has fashioned a musical setting that is vivacious, in a strictly modern mood and adorned with at least three song hits.

The cast that the junior Shubert has assembled for the interpretation of the melodious fable could hardly have been improved upon. One of the suavest and most polished singing and dancing comedians on the stage, Clifton Webb is an ideal choice for the role of Gaston, the "gentleman's gentleman" who essays the precarious social adventure of posing as his own master. Rex O'Malley is no less efficient in the part of the real Baron Ferdinand de Romer, who, for purposes of discretion and a little quiet fun, permits himself to be impressed into the impersonation of his valet's valet.

On the distaff side there is even more over which an audience may gloat. Libby Holman returns to the boards in this production in one of its less pretentious roles and still has it in her power to sway audiences by the peculiar throatiness of her mezzo voice. An unprogrammed song in the first act last night—a new number sung for the first time—found Miss Holman acutely nervous, but the later scenes in which she appeared disclosed the Libby musical comedy enthusiasts have applauded in many earlier vehicles of a similarly enlivening nature.

Lupe Loops the Loop.

Lupe Velez, the Mexican star of both stage and screen—with a slight accent on the screen—in the role of the maid, romped through the most riotous performance of the evening. Miss Velez is a singing and dancing actress of verve and versatility who is particularly resourceful in creating caricatures of her fellow artistes of the cinema with a minimum of extraneous aid. By brief touches of inspired artistry she becomes, by turns, Katharine Hepburn, Simone Simon, Gloria Swanson and Shirley Temple—all in the course of one song, which was the outstanding number of the two acts in the intricate matter of show-stopping."

Another who gives an uncommonly fine account of herself, in view of the fact that this is the first major musical attraction in which she ever has appeared, is Toby Wing, also principally known for many excellent performances on the silver sheet. Miss Wing has a song or two to which she does ample justice and plays a saucy part with comic effectiveness, although with a bit too much vocal vehemence for those sitting down front. April, another youngster in the cast, demonstrates exceptional ability as a tap dancer.

Has Beauty Chorus.

Charles Kemper and George Dobbs are among the members of a considerable supporting ensemble who add to the spontaneity and humor of the eight scenes and, in the second act, a group of dancing lads familiar to local vaudeville audiences interpolate a "gendarme" number that scored decisively last night.

But there is still work to be done on "You Never Know." The second act is neither so interesting nor so sprightly as the first and the piece is at least a quarter of an hour too long.

The song hit unmistakably is "From Alpha to Omega," sung by Mr. Webb and Miss Velez, with "What Shall I do?" by Miss Velez, and "At Long Last Love," by Mr. Webb, close runners-up. A handsome chorus adds vivacity to the ensembles—recruited, one is led to believe, largely from "Between the Devil." The dances are frolicsome things.

For those inured to the usual frivolities of musical comedy, "You Never Know" is about what the doctor ordered for early spring.

Nelson B. Bell About The Showshops

Pulitzer Prize-Winning Playwright Has Dramatized Greatest Enlistment of Nomenclature in A. E. F.; Big Revue at Capitol; Deanna's Next; Capital Loses Resident Star; 'Mayerling' Holds Over; Notes.

THERE were, it seems, 3,000 Johnny Johnsons in the United States Expeditionary Forces in the World War—more of that name than any other. So the hero of Paul Green's famous anti-war play is named Johnny Johnson.

As Mr. Green explained to one of this column's more reliable prompters the other night, he has tried to tell the story of the common man, the everyday man, the natural man, caught up in the maelstrom of an unnatural world. Johnny, he says, is sired by Poor Richard, Rip Van Winkle, David Harum, Mark Twain, Will Rogers—all of the typical American homespun philosophers of all times and all places. He is not a Yankee or a Carolinian, with a soft voice like Playwright Green's; he is not a Westerner nor an Easterner. Green carefully avoids giving him a birthplace, a family or a definite age in the play.

BELL.

Johnny Johnson, in short, as Mr. Green so conclusively proves, is common sense in a world where common sense right now, in Mr. Green's own words, is "having a hell of a time." He is a sane, simple, honest man, the kind that stays the same, unchanged in changing times; who retains his common sense, philosophy and humor even when the rest of the world is enmeshed in the collective insanity of war.

Paul Green, I am told, is glad the Washington Civic Theater is going to play his "Johnny Johnson"—it opens at Wardman Park with a sponsored preview tomorrow night and for the public on Thursday night of this week—because he feels that even if the play does not succeed in telling all he feels so deeply, it is, at least, "a small deposit on the side of truth."

He is happy also about the simplified form of staging which the Civic is giving his drama. He feels that it probably will be better for it than the framework provided by the Group Theater, in New York, last year. He has been watching rehearsals, talking with Director Strickland, Designer Girvan, Actor Harrison Libbey, who will appear in the title role, and with all the Civic people, whipping them into something of a lather of enthusiasm by his very quiet, slow, clear-thinking, deep-feeling regard for the stuff of his play.

Paul Green served a trick of 25 months with the U. S. Army during the World War and has dedicated "Johnny Johnson" in these words: "To a Memory Living."

One wonders if "Johnny Johnson" may not, after all, be largely—or at least partially—autobiographical.

In passing, the costume designing for "Johnny Johnson" is in charge of Mary Woodard Davis. Mrs. Davis insists that she will be an authority on uniforms after this production. Last year she designed the Corpos uniforms for "It Can't Happen Here" and last fall was responsible for the dressing of "Yellow Jack." But the uniforms in "Johnny Johnson" are really a job! There are English soldiers, German soldiers, a king and all the Allied generals. The women, however, are giving her the severest headache. They have to be dressed in the vintage clothes of 1917. "They're sort of different from what we wear now, arn't they?" "Do I have to look like that?" and "I refuse to wear that hat!" are only a few of the remonstrances with which Mrs. Davis has been bombarded. Women, so I hear, are like that!

In preparation for the presentation of Count Berni Vici's elaborate new revue, "Spices of 1938," a special crew of mechanics and technicians will arrive here Thursday to set up triple floor levels and a revolving stage at Loew's Capitol Theater.

These ponderous sets are necessary to the successful staging of the numerous spectacular numbers in the revue, including "The docking of the 90,000-ton Queen Mary;" "A living girl unafraid in the arms of a 60-foot monster robot;" "Dreadnaughts on Review;" "Noudite en rouge;" "The cellophane star dance" and the new continental "Danse de poudre pouffe."

"The Jungle Girl," a new European illusion, showing a living girl in a miniature 10-inch jungle, will be on view in the lobby throughout the engagement. Would this be the harbinger of the "side-show" season?

There was a bit of a twinkle in her eye, at the banquet tossed in her honor by Manager Hardie Meakin, of RKO-Keith's, at the Mayflower last Thursday night, when the delightfully ingenuous Miss Deanna Durbin, aged 15, confided that her next starring picture, following "Mad About Music," not yet seen in the Capital, will bear the title of "That Certain Age." One was almost tempted to suspect that the youthful Miss Durbin feels that she has reached "that certain age," when talented young women begin to think of clothes and boys and sealing wax and cabbages and kings, and things. But maybe the ability to interpret girlish twinkles has escaped me. I often wonder.

Comes a letter, which says, in part:

"Dear Mr. Bell: I'm off to Los Angeles and Hollywood three weeks from now, to stay. I am interested in the Pasadena Playhouse, or do you suppose I could get into a training school on one of the lots? I'm making my last local 'public appearance' Monday night, March 28, at the President's Cup Regatta Ball, Willard ballroom, where I shall do a little ditty in 'gay 'nineties' costume with Johnny Slaughter's orchestra. We're rehearsing Sunday at 3. Sincerely, (Signed) JANET COON."

So there goes another of Washington's most talented resident actresses, singers and whistlers. Miss Coon first came to this reporter's attention when she added a fillip to certain radio broadcasts by her ability as a whistler of more than ordinary accomplishment. It was not long before she was "playing dates" in major theaters. She has since become one of the most popular members of the Roadside Theater and other Washington acting groups. Her place will be hard to fill on the roster of Washington's reliable artistes.

That merit is not permitted to go unrecognized in the National Capital is evidenced by the announcement that having broken all existing attendance records on Lafayette Square, "Mayerling," starring Charles Boyer and Danielle Darrieux, will be continued on the screen a second week, beginning today, at the Belasco Theater. This is the picture that quite merited the Drama Critics Circle, of New York's award as the best foreign-made screen play of 1937. It deals with the tragic love affair between Archduke Rudolph of Austria and the Baroness Marie Vetsera, one of the mysteries of the late '80's in European court circles.

The first meeting for discussion of plans for the 1938 season of Sylvan Theater "festival programs" will be held in the new Interior Building tomorrow at 10:30 a. m. A cordial invitation from Mrs. Elizabeth K. Peeples, director of the Community Center Department, to serve on the Sylvan Theater committee must be reluctantly declined, not from any lack of interest, but because earlier commitments of a similar nature have demonstrated with some conclusiveness that official duties nullify any attempt we might make to lend helpful co-operation to those entertainment agencies in the Capital gracious enough to suggest our participation, even remotely, in the conduct of their enterprises.

Tommy Dorsey, "sentimental gentleman of swing," will present his regular weekly network broadcast from the stage of the Earle Theater tomorrow night from 8:30 to 9 p. m. Patrons of the Earle Wednesday night thus will be privileged to hear the regular Dorsey stage program, the half-hour broadcast and see the feature picture, "Thrill of a Lifetime," all for the one price of admission. If that isn't a bargain, I never saw one.

Capable New Movie Team Successful

When the old Chicago Cubs of baseball fame were in their glory their triple play combination was known as "Evers, to Tinker, to Chance," but out at Universal Studio the new slogan is "Granger to Simon, to Krasner."

This combination was formed when Producer Edmund Grainger gave S. Sylvan Simon, Hollywood's youngest director, his first directorial chance. He placed him in charge of "A Girl With Ideas," and gave him as a mainstay Milton Krasner, veteran ace cameraman. That was six months ago.

So successful was this combination that it was carried on and in rapid succession Simon made "A Prescription for Romance," "The Crime of Dr. Hallet" and now has gone into production on "Nurse From Brooklyn," starring Sally Eilers, Paul Kelly and Larry Blake.

The scene of the first picture was Chicago, the second in Hungary, the third in Sumatra and now the locale for Simon's last picture is in Brooklyn, so he has traveled plenty, in a pictorial sense.

"Young directors often have a fresh viewpoint which is invaluable," said Grainger, "but they must have a background."

Before Simon became a director he had supervised the tests of more than 200 young actors and actresses at Universal. During one year of that work he utilized more than 100,000 feet of film, equivalent to eight motion pictures of average length. From these tests the company developed more than a score of promising youngsters.

In Hollywood With Hedda Hopper

I hear tell that the Cornelius Vanderbilts have a nice little shack on Fifth avenue. But I never got me nose inside it. Their son, Junior, writes nasty pieces in the magazines about movie folk. I always thought it was sour grapes, because the movies never gave him employment.

Just then, Director George Cuker called Katie to do off-stage voice for the difficult scene in which Cary Grant is cross-questioned by her father. Cary had a frog in his throat. Katie ran to bring him a glass of water, at which George called out: "Don't believe it, Hedda, she's only doing that to impress the press. She wouldn't do that for some writers I know."

The scene continued. After a few takes, they decided to skip it until next morning. Cary took a terrific razzing from the company, then turned to Katie and said: "They did 22 takes of you a few days ago." Whereupon Katie yelled: "That's a lie—26."

I thought this was a good time to ask how her love life was. "Oh, just rolling along" was all I got. Served me right for being so curious.

Katie was dressed in a white silk shirtwaist and black wrap-around skirt. Her only ornaments a carved hand at her throat and one at her belt. Her crowning glory, as always, was her hair. She evidently does her hundred brush strokes at night to give it that brilliancy. On the set she brushed it once and let it alone.

She was knitting during a close-up saying to Cukor, "I'm going to knit until I knit." George replied, "You're going a little crazy, too." What she meant was she had to look at her knitting while she purled but could lift her eyes when she knitted.

Katie always reminds me of a thoroughbred horse. Whether you like her or not, you can't deny that quality shines through.

Feature Comics In New Picture

More than a century of comedy experience is represented in three of the featured players in "Reckless Living."

The veteran laughmakers are Jimmie Savo, Charles Judels and Harlan Briggs, each of whom began his theatrical career at a very tender age.

Savo, a newsboy on the streets of New York, learned to juggle and then began appearing in clubs about the town before he was well in his teens. Judels, of a long line of theatrical ancestors, was singing comedy songs on the stage at the age of 9. Briggs, at the age of 4, was inducted into the life of the theater through a portrayal of Little Eva in a presentation of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," but later decided that comic opera was more his forte.

Teamed with the "old-timers" is a trio of youngsters who, though their stage experience is negligible and their screen experience short, have made enviable names for themselves during the last 12 months. These are Robert Wilcox, William Lundigan and Nan Grey. Lundigan and Wilcox are products of Universal's Drama School. Miss Grey was one of the "Three Smart Girls" with Deanna Durbin in her notable picture last year.

Blonde Blames Police Killers Of District Man

town department store where she is employed.

"I'm all upset," she told a Post reporter, "To see that man shot down the way he was—it was terrible—I'll never get over it.

Mrs. Rawlings said she was on her way home. She was driving her own car. With her was her sister and brother-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Marvin Poole, also of McLean. The car apparently driven by Daugherty, she said, passed her traveling in the opposite direction at a "moderate rate of speed."

"And then without warning," said Mrs. Rawlings, "the police car—without any lights—appeared suddenly in front of me and forced my car off the highway. I had hardly come to a stop when I heard the shots."

Meanwhile, bonds for Policemen Herbert C. Knox and Edwin Scheid, accused of the shooting, were increased from $1,000 each to $2,500 each late yesterday.

A preliminary hearing was scheduled for 10 a. m. Thursday in Arlington County Police Court.

Mrs. Rawlings said the police didn't have time to ask Daugherty questions because the shots came so quickly.

According to the stories of Knox and Scheid, they had stopped Daugherty for speeding and reckless driving after a 4-mile chase through Arlington and Fairfax counties.

When they sought to question the fugitive, he jammed his car in gear and tried to run over them, the policemen reported. Scheid, according to reports, fired five times and Knox once. A bullet entered a rear side window of the car and lodged in Daugherty's head.

The officers' guns and bullets were brought to Washington yesterday for a ballistics test by Lieut. John Fowler, Metropolitan Police ballistics expert. Lieut. Fowler is expected to report today on which gun fired the fatal bullet.

After Daugherty was shot, his car careened into the front yard of Miss Cora Bowen, 4356 Lee highway. Miss Bowen, a teacher at the Leland Junior High School in Bethesda, Md., said the machine was traveling at a "terrific speed" when it plowed through a hedge skirting her yard.

A second eyewitness of the shooting, Robert Albertis, said that he saw Daugherty's car start slowly down the road after several shots had been fired. Albertis lives at 4370 Lee highway, about 30 feet from the point where the shooting occurred.

Meanwhile a note of mystery entered the case with the account of Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Barghausen.

Awakened by Dog.

The driveway from the home of George Frazier, Daugherty's father-in-law, enters the street directly opposite the Barghausen home. Next door to the Barghausens is the home of Schied.

Mr. Barghausen told last night of being awakened early Sunday morning by the barking of his dog. "I always investigate out here when the dog barks, and I got up to see what was the matter. I found nothing and went back to bed.

"Before I went to sleep a bright light shined in the bedroom window. The light kept floshing on and off for several minutes.

"I went out on the front porch, and saw a car parked in Frazier's driveway. The lights were off." Mr. Barghausen said he went back indoors, and then saw the car start, with lights on, turn left toward Falls Church. From Schied's driveway, he said, a car slipped out and fololwed the first car.

The second car carried no lights, he said.

Barghausen said he was fairly sure the car he saw parked in Frazier's driv way was Daugherty's and that the car which followed him was Schied's private automobile. He said he could not see who was driving either car.

He said that his wife also witnessed the incident.

Daugherty, it was learned, took Frazier's son, George Frazier, jr., to the Frazier home in Falls Church and left about 1 a. m.

Gov. Price, of Virginia, asked yesterday if he planned an investigation, announced it was "purely a local matter." It was learned however, that he had talked by telephone to Sheriff Howard B. Fields, of Arlington County.

According to Associated Press reports, the Governor announced:

"I wanted to find out about the matter personally because of questions that had been asked me. However, my inquiry should not be construed as an investigation of a matter that is within the sole jurisdiction of local authorities."

The American Automobile Association last night announced plans to aid Virginia authorities in investigation and prosecution. The local auto club offered legal aid to the dead man's family.

William C. Gloth, former Arlington County Commonwealth attorney, who will represent Daugherty's widow at the hearing, revealed last night that at least another witness to the shooting had been found. He said he was a mail collector for the Clarendon postoffice who had happened by the scene at about the same time as Mrs. Rawlings.

Although suspended from duty, neither Scheid nor Knox had been charged last night. They will appear at Thursday's hearing. Knox, son of the Rev. U. S. Knox, was appointed by the Falls Church Town Council about 18 months ago. Scheid has been a member of the force less than a year. Neither is married.

Were After Stolen Car.

According to the officers' stories as told to Mayor Daniel, the shots were not fired with any intention of killing Daugherty. Both Scheid and Knox said they shot at the tires and gas tank. A front tire was punctured by the gunfire.

At the time Daugherty's car was sighted, the policemen were investigating a stolen-car case in West Falls Church. They chased the speeding car—reportedly at 70 miles an hour—into Cherrydale, where the shooting occurred.

An estimate of $20,000 was placed on Daugherty's real estate holdings in Arlington County last night by his uncle, Thomas Wallis. Wallis said he wanted to correct the impression that Daugherty was without funds.

The 31-year-old musician had been married about two years. He lived at 1737 Kenyon street northwest and was a native of Arlington County.

Funeral services will be held at 2 p. m. today from Ives' undertaking establishment in Clarendon.

Such procedure by the President would not be subject to challenge in the courts, as was his removal of the late William E. Humphreys from the Federal Trade Commission—subsequently held invalid by the Supreme Court. This procedure, if it brought about a Congressional inquiry, would meet the wishes of Chairman Morgan, who has demanded such an investigation.

Chairman Morgan, at his press conference reiterated his desire for an investigation by Congress and said that if such an inquiry were ordered he would be prepared with "facts to substantiate my charges."

Such a procedure by the President also would be in harmony with the TVA act which provides that "any member of said board may be removed from office at any time by a concurrent resolution of the Senate and House of Representatives." The only other reference in the act to the removal of a TVA director provides that the President shall remove any board found guilty of applying a political test or qualification in appointing or promoting any official or employe of the TVA. Such activities do not figure in the present TVA controversy.

No official confirmation that Mr. Roosevelt would seek to have Congress pass finally, on the Morgan case was available last night. If that is Mr. Roosevelt's intention, he apparently had not taken his Capitol Hill leaders into his confidence, for most of them disavowed knowledge of such plans.

Significance, however, was attached to the President's use of the word "suspension" in the final ultimatum to Chairman Morgan at yesterday's White House conference. Officials usually are suspended by their immediate superiors until some other person or agency has had an opportunity to pass on their actions. The word "suspension" consequently carries a connotation of a temporary status pending some final decision.

Mr. Roosevelt made the declaration that he would take further action toward the removal or suspension of Chairman Morgan at the end of the third White House session of the President's investigation into the dissension within the TVA. His declaration came at the end of a lengthy statement in which he summed up the situation in great detail.

Before proceeding to his summary of the Morgan-TVA case—which the President said constituted the reasons for the action he would take—he again demanded that the TVA chairman answer "yes or no" as to whether he was willing to present to the President or his representatives factual information regarding the charges he has made against his fellow-directors, David Lilienthal and Dr. Harcourt Morgan.

Chairman Morgan replied that "since last Friday I have given the deepest consideration to the question you put to me at the end of the session."

"Cannot Participate."

"For the reasons which I have given in the two conferences already held," he added, "I feel impelled to say that I cannot participate further in these proceedings."

The reasons Morgan previously had given were that he did not believe an inquiry by the President could be broad enough to consider all the issues involved and that he believed the only adequate investigation would have to be made by a Congressional committee.

In replying to Chairman Morgan's refusal to participate in the Presidential inquiry, Mr. Roosevelt said, "I feel, especially because you are a very old friend of mine and I have had great respect and admiration for you, I feel very sorry that you have impelled me to make this decision."

Two Statements Ready.

The President continued by explaining that over the week-end he had prepared two statements. One, he said, was predicated on Morgan's willingness to participate in the White House inquiry. This outlined methods of procedure which would have enabled the chairman "to have full advice of counsel, full time to prepare any documentary evidence that you might want to bring in, and, in other words, full and free opportunity to present all of your case on these questions, even subjects which you might deem to relate even somewhat remotely to these questions." The President said he was sorry he could not read that memorandum, but must read the second one he prepared.

In this memorandum the President pointed out his responsibility for the conduct of the executive branch of the Government, cited the origin of the dissension in the TVA board, recalled briefly the highlights of the charges made from time to time by Chairman Morgan, the retort of his two colleagues and the necessity for action. He said he "could not ignore charges of dishonesty, bad faith and conspiracy" in administration of TVA.

Calls Charge "Libelous."

In fairness to the other two members of the board, he said, he "could not wash my hands of these grave and libelous charges against men whose alleged guilt had not been proven, any more than I can today wash my hands of these charges because of the possibility or probability that at some later date they may be investigated by another branch or branches of the Federal Governmnt."

He described his summons to the three TVA directors to appear before him and substantiate their charges against each other and recalled the repeated refusal of Chairman Morgan to participate in these proceedings and the statements made by his two colleagues during these sessions. The President said he had been "patient" with Chairman Morgan, but there is "a limit to patience."

The reputations of Harcourt Morgan and Lilienthal and the continuing operation of an important Government agency had to be considered, he said. He said he could not permit "a recalcitrant non-cooperative official further freedom to sabotage Government operations at a crucial time." Nor could he permit, he added, establishment of a precedent "whereby any subordinate in the executive branch of the Government can refuse to give to his superior or to the Chief Executive himself facts sought in order to straighten out difficulties which he charges exist in his own departmental work."

Finally, the President summed up the evidence to the effect that Chairman Morgan had failed to sustain the charges against his colleagues and that in the absence of any testimony from the chairman the charges of obstruction made against him by his colleagues must be accepted as true.

"Arthur E. Morgan," the President pronounced, "is guilty of insubordination and contumacy in refusing to submit to the Chief Executive's demand for any facts upon which he based charges of dishonesty and want of integrity on the part of his fellow directors."

Asks Public Apology.

Thereupon he called on Chairman Morgan "at once publicly to withdraw the charges that he has made impugning the honesty, good faith and integrity and motives of his fellow directors and to give to them and to the country assurances that he will, in the future, loyally cooperate with his fellow directors in carrying out the provisions of the Tennessee Valley Authority act."

"I make this request of him," said the President. "If he cannot accede, it is his duty to resign."

Then he laid down his ultimatum, asserting he hoped Chairman Morgan "will not make it necessary for me to take further action." He set 2:30 p. m. today as an hour up to which Morgan might present in person or in writing "any reason why, as Chief Executive, I should not take further action as a necessary result of the findings which I have just read to him." He added that "only two courses appear open—either your removal or your suspension."

Morgan Makes Reply.

In reply Chairman Morgan said: "Mr. President, I deny the accuracy and the adequacy and representativeness of the statement you made. I have no other statements to make here now except these: It is my judgment that my resignation at this time would not be in the public interest. Therefore, I do not tender my resignation. I wish also to say that I challenge the suggestion and deny the right and the power to remove or to suspend me.

"I want to say this, that the opportunity to work under you in the TVA represented a very great opportunity for anyone. I accepted that opportunity sincerely. In my opinion, I have used it in good faith and with reasonable effectivness, and it is very painful indeed to me to have a situation of lack of harmony between us. That is a matter of very great regret to me, and I want to say that my position is taken not at all in any spirit of defiance—only in a spirit of trying to do what to me seems the necessary and proper thing to do in the circumstances. I thank you for your consideration."

The President then asserted:

"I think we feel equally badly about this whole thing."

An hour and a half later, in a press conference at his hotel, Chairman Morgan said he did not expect to have any further communication with the White House before 2:30 p. m. today. He told of his plan to leave the city for Yellow Springs, Ohio, for a brief visit. He said he had no specific plans beyond that visit.

He reiterated his challenge of the President's power to remove or suspend him and said he would "stand on that." He declined to discuss what steps he would take if the President undertook to remove or suspend him. He said he had not engaged an attorney, but had consulted "several attorneys—old friends of mine, of the President and of TVA." He declined to reveal their identity without their approval.

Asked if he meant New Deal attorneys or TVA lawyers were advising him that the President had no power to remove him, the chairman said he did not. He said the men he had consulted, however, were friendly to the President. He said he had "limited my consultations almost entirely to friends of the President."

Asked if he would retract his charges, Morgan said the inference of what he had said at the White House was he would not. He agreed that was a correct inference. Asked if he thought Congress might protect him, he replied that "Congress can do a great many things."

Get at the Cause of Constipation!
You know that constipation often gives you that dopey, sunken, bogged down feeling. Why not get at the cause and fix it?
If you eat what most people do—things like bread, meat and potatoes—the chances are all that's the matter with you is you don't get enough "bulk." And "bulk" doesn't mean what you may think. It's a kind of food that isn't entirely digested, but leaves a soft, bulky mass in the intestines that aids elimination.
If this is your trouble, what you need is a dish of crisp, crunchy Kellogg's All-Bran for breakfast every day. It contains the "bulk" you need, plus Nature's intestinal tonic vitamin B_1, and iron.
Eat All-Bran every day, drink plenty of water, and see if the old world doesn't look a lot brighter! All-Bran is made by Kellogg in Battle Creek. Sold by every grocer.

A Chance To Hit Crime.

Tame when contrasted with crime detection, newly stimulated efforts toward crime prevention are nonetheless proving themselves eminently worthwhile. The best known of them perhaps is the Boys Club movement. Its effectiveness is indicated by Washington's experience. Before the city began to take an interest in underprivileged boys, as many as 353 ran afoul of the law in a year. In 1937, after five years of work among them, the figure dropped to 89, notwithstanding a considerable increase in the city's population.

Though the Boys Club here is associated with the national organization directed by Sanford Bates, from which it obtains valuable guidance, it originated in the mind of Maj. Ernest W. Brown, superintendent of police. It was his idea that inadvertent antagonism between boy and cop, as vividly portrayed in Sidney Kingsley's play "Dead End," were considerable factors in the production of criminals. He proposed to reverse the tradition.

Support was found to begin an organization which today boasts a membership of more than 10,000 boys whose development into healthy, useful citizens is sponsored by the local police. Instead of drumming up mischief on the streets, they meet for games, entertainment and even medical care in five clubhouses located in various neighborhoods of the city. In summer the boys have the advantages of a camp in nearby Maryland. That their enthusiasm for these activities is not perfunctory is demonstrated by the daily average attendance record of 97.8 maintained at the original clubhouse.

The Washington Boys Club's annual appeal for funds is under way. The goal is the same as last year's—$75,000. The budget calls for reductions in the expenditures on all but one of the existing clubs—they are well established now. The savings will go to open new clubs, it being the hope ultimately to have one in each of the city's 13 precincts.

The sentiment is prevalent about Washington that everyone talks a great deal of reducing crime but no one does much about it. Everyone has a chance to do something very concrete about it today by contributing a few dollars to the Boys Club.

Water Resources Program.

Revising and extending its recommendations of a year ago a subcommittee of the National Resources Committee has outlined a plan for a six-year construction and investigation program designed to fit into a unified policy of water control and development. This Water Resources Committee acting as a "clearing house" for numerous plans and projects has outlined a co-ordinated program for the country as a whole based upon the findings of so-called drainage basin committees.

Specific recommendations call for an estimated outlay of about $890,000,000 during the next six years on various Federal projects. Non-Federal projects concerned with water supply, and with sewage and pollution abatement are also listed. These would entail expenditures of approximately $1,220,000,000 over the same period. For the Mississippi-Ohio River areas, however, the committee confines its recommendations to a two-year period, explaining that the interlocking problems of these two great waterways are so extremely complex and so imperfectly understood as to require further comprehensive study. Under the circumstances, the report states, it would be "most unwise for the Congress to authorize at this time any additional general flood control plan for them."

The average annual outlays necessitated by the suggested programs would correspond roughly, it is said, to the average annual expenditures of recent years. However, a program of this sort can be developed on either a contracted or an expanded scale in any given year. Indeed, the report stresses the importance of varying the amount and type of construction and the apportionment of costs between Federal and local agencies in accordance with movements of the business cycle. The committee rightly emphasizes the fact that "public works if planned in advance, can be a factor in the mitigation of business booms and depressions."

The Federal Government is directly concerned with such questions as flood control, irrigation, water power development, navigation and soil conservation. A great many projects are designed to serve multiple purposes, and all of them should be considered integral parts of a Federal water policy "concerned not with water by and for itself, but with the promotion of public safety, public health, the public convenience and comfort, the economic welfare of the public, the re-establishment or maintenance of a high standard of living."

Of course, such an integrated program involves treating certain drainage areas as units in disregard of State boundary lines, and consequently calls for a large measure of co-operation among the States. The committee points out, however, that of late gratifying progress has been made toward solving water problems by interstate action.

Nevertheless, in spite of all that has been accomplished in a preliminary way, stress is laid upon the inadequacy of available data for comprehensive long-range planning. To avoid the losses inevitably resulting from embarking without sufficient knowledge upon costly developmental projects, the Water Resources Committee urges the need for continued investigation of our water problems for purposes of flood control, navigation, power development and soil management. It also asks appropriate Congressional action to assure continued and increasingly effective co-operation among Federal, State and local agencies in carrying forward a comprehensive and dovetailed national program.

Deeper Into Confusion.

Every move that has been made by President Roosevelt in the TVA case seems to have intensified the controversy. The latest chapter is entirely in keeping with what went before. The President's efforts to get to the bottom of Chairman Morgan's charges against the majority directors and their countercharges against him have been finally thwarted. So he has pronounced his judgment on the basis of the evidence available.

That fact alone would make the outcome to date highly unsatisfactory. In spite of the President's responsibility to see that Federal laws are properly executed, he is not in a position to try a case of this sort. It would have been far better if the President had recognized that fact when Chairman Morgan first made known his stubborn refusal to participate in any White House inquiry. As matters stand, the President has had to acknowledge his inability to make a thorough investigation. And to drop the controversy without such an inquiry is now unthinkable.

There is every reason for the President to be annoyed by the obstinate attitude which Chairman Morgan has taken. But Mr. Roosevelt's threat to remove or suspend the TVA head merely adds another knot to the tangle in which that agency has become involved. Dr. Morgan has challenged the right and power of the President to oust him. If that question should be left to decision of the courts, the TVA would remain in a precarious state for a long period.

Moreover since a Senatorial investigation now seems inevitable, it might well be made while Chairman Morgan is still a member of the board. Even though he has acted arbitrarily during the President's inquiry, the policy for which he has stood ought not to be prejudiced before the Senate hearings begin. Hasty action in matters of this sort seldom bring the best results, especially when the President's power of removal seems to be questionable.

It will make little difference, therefore, whether or not Chairman Morgan responds to the President's latest ultimatum. And any action the President may take will be necessarily subordinate to the prospective investigation by the Senate. In these circumstances the President would strengthen his own hand by simply dumping the entire dilemma into the Senate's lap.

The Relief Inquiry.

Groups seeking to change the date for the proposed report on unemployment relief needs in Washington have an uphill fight. It is true that the proposal to delay this report until August 1 is inexcusable. Since the revised appropriations bill has already been approved by a conference committee and passed the Senate, however, there seems to be little hope of changing it.

More progress might be made by carrying the problem direct to the chairmen of the House and Senate sub-committees on District appropriations. The absurdity of providing for an investigation of unemployment relief needs and then delaying the report until after the probable adjournment of Congress could be readily established. Civic organizations could then make a strong case for several concessions. They could ask for immediate appointment of the investigators. They could pledge co-operation with any experts who may be appointed so as to expedite the inquiry.

By this method it might be possible to complete a report before Congress goes home for the summer. In any event a preliminary report could be issued before the adjournment date, and if additional funds are found to be urgently needed they could be provided in the final deficiency bill. The investigators could then proceed with their study and prepare more complete findings for the guidance of Congress in dealing with the 1940 appropriation bill.

Under no circumstances will a report on August 1 be fully satisfactory. It is almost certain to be too late for action by the present Congress, and by next year the situation may be substantially changed. But if there is a will to co-operate in getting the essential information before Congress adjourns a way can easily be found. Whether or not the appropriations bill can be modified, therefore, an appeal to the sportsmanship of those legislators who have agreed to an inquiry should be all that is necessary to make certain that it will not be delayed so long as to make it valueless.

Stone Walls Do Not . . .

What the community has long surmised regarding its penal institutions is now authoritatively confirmed. After a year of thorough investigation, the Prison Industries Reorganization Administration reports to the District Commissioners and Board of Public Welfare that the Capital's jail, workhouse and reformatory are all woefully inadequate.

The jail, as might have been expected from the fact that it was built in 1875, is by all odds the worst of the three. The institutions at Lorton and Occoquan are at least well laid out, though both are too small for the needs of a city of 625,000. But the jail lacks even good planning. As a result, it is necessary to herd together every type of prisoner—witnesses, persons under indictment, panhandlers and drunks under short-term sentence, prisoners awaiting transfer to Lorton and even some facing the death penalty.

No expert knowledge of penology is needed to recognize the undesirability of such practice. Not only does it breed discontent among prisoners; it also complicates the task of rehabilitation. It perhaps explains, in some measure, the abnormally high proportion of "repeaters" found in District institutions. Men with records of 100 sentences are not unknown.

Inclinations to condone crowding, on the score that transients make it inevitable, disappear with a reading of the PIRA report. From interviews with 675 prisoners it appears that 64 per cent of the workhouse inmates claim residence in Washington of more than five years; only 15 per cent are to be classed as transients.

A further point made clear by the report is society's share of responsibility in the crime rate here. At the workhouse, 39 per cent of the prisoners had had no work for periods ranging from 7 to 18 months, while another 21 per cent had been unemployed from 1 to 6 months during the past two years. Significant, too, are the findings that illiteracy runs between 9 and 12 per cent higher in the workhouse than the average for the city.

A score of years ago when the workhouse, with its "open," wall-less design was dedicated, Washington was an acknowledged leader in penological progress. If the Capital would recapture this becoming title, it—and particularly Congress—cannot ignore the constructive criticism of the PIRA.

Ode To The Cootie.

Donne envied a flea its intimacy with his lady love. On seeing a louse, Burns was moved to sigh the world's sigh for the "giftie" to "see oursel's as others see us." And more than a few saws and chestnuts turn on either the insignificance or the ubiquity of what the entomologist is pleased to refer to as pediculus humanus. But it has remained for a Japanese to sing a song to the cootie in terms that will be most widely appreciated.

Thousands, nay millions without doubt, of men who went through the World War will be particularly affected by it. Indeed, could it be sung to all of them today it might serve a valuable purpose in reminding them that whether marching under sun, swastika or Stars and Stripes all men are the same under the skin—to the cootie! In any event, somewhere along the Hsuchow front the following "Serenade," here broadly translated, was recently composed:

Sitting around the campfire I think of you,
I know you think of me, too,
Because you tell me so.
All this broad land is devastated and getting thin,
Only you are getting fat—
Lucky louse.

Thank goodness, that keg of powder the world has been sitting on for, lo, these many months, will stand, without exploding, much more heat than most of us had any idea it would.

"The average man can tell you all he knows in two hours," declares a college professor. Not if we see him first.

"Dancing is the best possible exercise for the joints," declares a physician. A Big Apple a day will keep the chiropractor away, eh?

Search For An Anthem.

From The Dallas Morning News.

Convinced that "The Star-Spangled Banner" never will prove satisfactory as a national anthem, four men who met recently in New York have begun a movement to produce a new song that will be more singable, more American and less militaristic. These men are Jascha Heifetz, violinist; Henry Goddard Leach, editor of the Forum; Lawrence Tibbett, barytone, and Padraic Colum, president of the Poetry Society.

Objections to "The Star-Spangled Banner" are that it has a foreign tune, places too much emphasis on "bombs bursting in air" and can be sung only by the minority able to reach high C. What is desired is a song as dignified as "America," but with an indigenous tune—and one as sprightly as "Dixie," but with a national instead of sectional appeal. Above all, it must be a song that everyone can sing.

Prizes totaling $1,000 have been offered for suitable words for a song that might prove suitable as a national anthem; and if a promising lyric is found, music will be composed for it later. Influence of German marching songs in unifying the youths of that country is one of the factors that have impressed Americans with the need for a better national anthem for the United States. Since music has been in many countries a stimulant to patriotism, it would be hard to overemphasize the importance of obtaining the best possible national anthem for the United States.

Applauds Austria's Fate.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: After reading the articles and editorials on Hitler's coup in Austria, one would gather the idea that it was a terrible thing. For Europe's peace it might be; but for Austria, it is undoubtedly a happy occurrence.

Up until 1870 Germany was a disunited group of petty states, the two largest being Prussia and Austria. In 1870, by clever diplomacy, Bismarck forced France to declare war against Prussia. This, of course, was a big menace to the small German principalities of south Germany, and, for protection from France, they voluntarily joined Prussia. By this move Germany was united into one strong state, which included all the Germans except about 13,000,000, who lived in Austria and what is now Czechoslovakia.

After the World War, by the Treaty of St. Germain, the Austrian Empire was broken up and Austria became a small state with a totally German population. This gave Germany her chance to finish the union of all the Germans, because Austria no longer had her vast empire of Slavs and Hungarians, which had kept her out of a union with Prussia before. When Hitler's troops marched into Austria last week they were met with cheers. The people wanted to join Germany. They no longer have to fear foreign oppression; they have an outlet to the sea; they have become a part of one of Europe's mightiest countries, and, most important of all, the national unity of the German people which was started in 1815 has been almost completed.

Nearly everyone who has been to Germany lately says that the people are prosperous and satisfied under Hitler. Is there any reason why the Austrians will not be, too?

Neighborhood Nuisance.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Knowing by long experience of the interest of The Post in all matters, however humble, affecting residents of the District of Columbia, I am venturing to enlist your help in calling attention to a nuisance, not only obnoxious in character, but of actual menace to the health of the community.

I am a householder living in the northwest section of the city. About five years ago a neighbor began putting up an outhouse on his premises. When asked to state its purpose, he said he had a dog in the country which he wanted to bring into town and provide quarters for. A week or two later, his place began to fill up with two or three dozen chickens, which were not kept, as the rules of the Health Department require, 25 feet away from any structure owned by any person other than the applicant.

Today there are several dozen chickens there. Their cackling disturbs the rest of all the people in the block, and the odors arising from their presence are unendurable. The condition in question has also led to the neighborhood being infested with rats.

Washington is justly proud of its reputation of being the cleanest city in the country, but if things like I am complaining about are tolerated, the National Capital may some day become the dirtiest, instead of the cleanest, community in the land.

On Keeping Out Of War.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The newly organized "Keep America Out of War" Committee has chosen an excellent name for its organization and a high and challenging objective, but an impossible method to accomplish that objective. It is significant that many realistic peace organizations have united in the "Committee for Concerted Peace Efforts" and are urging co-operation, not isolation, to keep America out of war.

The isolationist sentiment in the United States is due first, to wishful thinking; second, to a definite propaganda by the dictatorships, and third, to a complete lack of comprehension by Americans of the psychology of the dictatorships.

Adolf Hitler's book, "Mein Kampf," should be required reading for all isolationists. It should be read in the original German, unexpurgated edition, since the English translation has eliminated the most offensive passages. It can no longer be shrugged aside as the ranting of an Austrian house painter.

Hitler—with our help—is making facts of the fantastic ideas in his book. "Mein Kampf" is a definite plan of offense as well as the bible of German nationalism. And German nationalism is a revolt against Christian civilization. Thomas Mann has called it the "St. Vitus dance of fanaticism." The salient article of its creed is an hysterical insistence upon Aryan-Germanic superiority. Naturally, if we understood psychology, this insane racial arrogance springs directly from a bitter conviction of inferiority! To make up for his feeling of inadequacy, the German must shout loudly that he is better than anyone else and must seek to compensate for his cankerous suspicion of insufficiency by war-like achievement—which must be crowned with victory. Only victory will cure the rankling sore of inferiority.

Hitler cannot risk defeat. He must subjugate the small nations of central and eastern Europe while the democracies are still confused and fearful. When he has a strong Middle Europe under his control, then and then only will he feel himself invincible enough to risk a major war. At the moment, he is desperately afraid of England and America but he consoles himself with the belief that they won't fight.

Isolationist talk in America is the sweetest music Hitler hears. As long as we continue to promise him that we won't join England and France to stop Nazi aggression, just so long will Hitler's progress toward world domination continue.

If we want to keep America out of war, we must do it now. If we wait—we will fight the defensive war which isolationists say is the only war they will fight. Does anyone believe that if Hitler succeeds in his dream of a Germanic Europe, he will stop there? We must drown out the isolationist propaganda by a realistic demand to "Keep America Out of War" by combining to prevent war. There is not other road to permanent peace—no other chance for the survival of the Christian civilization.

Beautiful Story.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In your always interesting column filled usually with clamor, pleadings and potshots I trust you may find space for one of the most beautiful stories life can weave:

An old friend who has lost his wife writes: "In the more than 40 years we were together not an unkind word passed between us . . . We had cast our lives together for each others happiness and we never lost sight of that promise at the altar. There are no unsaid words or actions to regret."

What more could anyone ask of his long tryst with memory.

The History Behind Vilna.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The recent acute situation between Poland and Lithuania which ended on March 20 by the acceptance of Poland's ultimatum, has focussed world attention anew on the problem of the rightful ownership of the old city of Vilna.

Having a natural predilection for the underdog, I have long had great sympathy for Lithuania's position, while endeavoring to understand the diametrically opposite point of view of the Poles. In my talks with Lithuanians and Poles I have seen that there was an irreconcilable difference of opinion, which made a settlement most difficult.

As a matter of fairness to Lithuania as a matter of interest at the moment, may I set forth briefly the salient facts. History tells us that from the tenth to the fifteenth century the territory and city of Vilna formed part of Lithuania, and in the fourteenth century Vilna became its capital and chief city. In the fifteenth century it became united with Poland and so remained until 1655, when it was taken by Russia. It was formally annexed to Russia in 1795, and remained in Russia's possession until the end of the World War when both Poland and Lithuania achieved their independence. By the Treaty of Brest-Litovsk in 1918 between Germany and Russia, the latter abandoned all claims to Lithuania, and the new Lithuanian republic once more established its capital at Vilna.

In 1919 the Bolsheviks attacked Poland and the latter took Vilna, only to lose it again to the Soviet forces in 1920 who handed it back again to Lithuania. By the treaty then signed between Russia and Lithuania the former recognized Lithuania's claim to Vilna. In December of 1919 the Supreme Council of the Allies in laying down the eastern frontier of Poland excluded the district of Vilna, thereby tacitly recognizing Lithuania's claims thereto.

Shortly thereafter the Polish and Lithuanian governments came to an agreement, which was to come into force October 10, 1920, by which Vilna was to remain part of Lithuania. On October 9, the day before the agreement was to become effective, Vilna was seized by Polish forces, and ever since, despite Lithuania's protests, it remains in Poland's possession. Thereupon Lithuania closed its frontier to Poland and the two countries have been completely cut off ever since. No trains have run; no air service, no commerce, and no contact of any kind have been permitted, and Lithuania has refused to budge from her position.

In 1923 the Council of Ambassadors in an endeavor to bring the matter to an end once for all gave Vilna to Poland, which only angered Lithuania the more. Still Lithuania continued to protest at Geneva, but the League's efforts to reach a solution were in vain, and the hopeless situation continued.

Mindful of Germany's successful coup against Austria and exasperated by Lithuania's unceasing intransigence, Poland presented to Lithuania an ultimatum in a determination to end the 20 years of friction.

It will be seen from the foregoing that, strictu juris, Lithuania has strong claims to her former capital. At the same time it is obvious that Poland's claims are also strong, being based upon the tacit recognition of the League of Nations. Legal rights unsupported by forces are unfortunately of little value today, and so Lithuania, like Austria, has bowed to the inevitable.

It cannot be doubted that by accepting Poland's demands Lithuania has acted wisely and for her own ultimate good and has contributed to the maintenance of peace in Europe by helping to remove one of its worst sore spots. The resumption of normal relations, if carried out in a spirit of mutual tolerance and goodwill, should go far in wiping out the bitterness of the past two decades. That is surely the hope of all friends of the two countrides.

ELIOT WATROUS.
Washington, March 20.

The Post Impressionist

IT'S about time for Isadore Matin to show up again. Now that the Beulah Limerick murder case has been revived, Matin should be along any with another confession of the murder of the 19-year-old "Sky High Whoopee Club" secretary.

You may well be fed up with mention of the 7-year-old murder case—it's one of Washington's best murders this century, and the newspapers are well aware of it—but you can't be half so disgusted with the name "Beulah Limerick" as police are with Isadore Matin and his confessions.

Matin first confessed to the crime in January, 1931, two weeks after Beulah was murdered. He walked into a Philadelphia police station, near his home, and "gave himself up." Washington police couldn't figure out what was what. Matin was a totally unfamiliar name in their investigation of the case. And Matin couldn't recall one person that knew both Beulah and himself. He was vague on details, had difficulty remembering which street his victim lived on. His Philadelphia landlady was most uncooperative, testifying that the night Beulah was murdered he did not leave the house—to say nothing of journeying the 125 miles to Washington.

But Matin clung persistently to his confession. It was only after many hours of questioning—and each minute Matin made additional mistakes—that detectives got what they knew was the truth: Matin was starting a golf school and the publicity from confessing to the Limerick murder would probably put it on the map financially.

Evidently the golf school was never started, or, at least, it must not have been successful, because two years later—October, 1933—Matin again confessed to murdering Beulah. This time, he said, he confessed because he wanted the "$800 reward" to pay off family debts. The "$800 reward" was as strange as the confession. Neither made sense. No reward had ever been offered.

It was a long time before Matin confessed he didn't have anything to confess. He had surrendered to a Philadelphia traffic policeman, had been returned to Washington as a mere formality, and stuck to his story for days. Police worked on him, pointing out that by his own story it was impossible for him to have been at the scene of the murder. He still didn't know what street Beulah lived on.

There were other points that Matin had difficulty in explaining. He said he killed Beulah with a single shot, fired while embracing her. Yet the 19-year-old theater usher was shot twice. There were no powder burns, indicating the shots must have been fired from a distance of at least several feet. He said he stuffed the bullet hole with cotton; yet the coroner's examination had showed neither of the wounds had been filled with cotton. And Matin, at first refusing to name the street on which Beulah lived, finally made a desperate guess—Sixth street, he said. That was only 13 blocks wrong.

But he had studied newspaper clippings—police found a formidable pile of them in his room—and he had a motive; he said that Beulah, with whom he was very friendly, threatened to break up his engagement to a Philadelphia girl. And despite the obvious foolishness of most his statements, for days he stuck to his confession. Eventually he gave up; perhaps it was realization that there was no $800, or maybe he just got tired.

The Philadelphia golf instructor who wanted to turn confessor did not present problems new to police. Every now and then they run into prisoners who will admit to practically anything.

Once, for instance, the Alexandria police were considerably upset by a telegram from a Florida penitentiary saying a colored prisoner had just confessed to murdering a woman near Arlington Cemetery. A search of the records showed no such murder, solved or unsolved, but the prisoner insisted on his guilt, so he was brought North for questioning. In Alexandria, he had difficulty in finding the scene of the "murder;" his best description placed it in the middle of a well-traveled highway. But the prisoner accomplished his objective. He had been sentenced to three years in Florida for violating prohibition laws, and State authorities refused to bother to return him to serve his remaining two years once his confession was disproved. Alexandria police did the only thing they could do—freed the man.

And local police still chuckle at the memory of a recent colored prisoner who admitted his guilt in every house breaking and larceny mentioned in his hearing. After admitting to some 200 of them, one burly copper asked: "Boy, how many hams did you get out of the White House kitchen on Christmas night?" The prisoner replied, "Three." What can you do with a case like that?

But Matin's persistence—his two confessions and obdurate insistence upon his guilt—make him more of a headache than a laugh to local detectives. Even now they talk of him reluctantly, fearing perhaps that mention of his name may bring him back with a third admission of guilt. According to vague reports, he is still in Philadelphia, though he may be anywhere for all they know.

But I have a suspicion that Matin will be back. The scene is ripe for another of Matin's confessions. Though this time he'd better study up in preparation, at least learning which street his victim lived on.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips.

First Flight.

"Nuthin' to it," I had heard many people say. "It's the only way to travel. Zip! . . . and you're there!" This time I decided to try it.

• • • •

It was much easier than arranging the details for a trip by boat or train. Kit Carson, an old newspaper friend, was going along with me. It was his first trip, too. For two days we kept telling each other, "There's nothing to it. Zip! . . . and you're there!" But we looked pale.

• • • •

The big 25-passenger airliner for Miami seemed to be getting a special going over. Mechanics were swarming about it. It made us a little more jittery. Finally "All aboard!" and we got aboard, taking seats amidships and feeling much as we always thought a balloonist must feel on his first ascension.

• • • •

Kit and I were noticeably shaky. The other passengers had the bored manner of old-time air travelers. It was most exasperating to see them settle back with a "heigh-ho and alackaday!" manner. Motors roared. The plane moved, sped down the field and then took off.

• • • •

Towers, skyscrapers, chimneys loomed below. They seemed to have taken off, too, and to be following us. "Okay?" I asked Kit, uneasily. "Fine. Only way to travel. Zip! . . . and you're there;" said Kit, who was now a shade or two under alabaster.

• • • •

What impressed us was the lack of speed sensation. Although making perhaps 150 miles per hour at the time, the ship seemed to be merely suspended in space. No vibration. No bumps. But the weather worried us. The fog was pretty thick and increased as we zoomed along. Why had we picked a day like this? What if it got thicker? Who was the captain, anyhow. We looked at the little slot and saw it was "Capt. L. H. Dice." "Dice?" we kept repeating. "Dice? Toss the dice . . . Just a gamble . . ."

• • • •

But Kit and I were doing our best to seem carefree. Quite abruptly, after about 20 minutes of flight, the steward, Cecil Register, in what was the calmest voice I had ever heard, said, "Ladies and gentlemen . . ." I thought it was going to be something about lunch. "We are returning to Newark," he smiled.

• • • •

It was just as if he were saying, "I forgot my umbrella."

• • • •

Kit and I turned cold. "It is nothing but some slight trouble with the oil pressure," Mr. Register said, ever so reassuringly. But Kit and I were scared. Slight trouble with the oil pressure? It would have panicked us if it had been nothing more but slight trouble with the electric fan, the chicken sandwiches.

• • • •

Before we realized it, the plane was back on the ground. I wanted to cancel, return to New York and go by train. Kit seemed ready for the railroad, too. Other passengers, noticing our paleness, reassured us. "The fact that the skipper returned, rather than to go on and take any chances before reaching Washington, ought to make you feel all the better," they said. Nobody else was at all excited. "Only way to travel. Zip! . . . and you're there!" repeated somebody.

• • • •

We decided to go on. But we could still feel the goose-pimples. Presently the ship was off again. Fog all the way to Washington. We kept watching Mr. Register. There may be more reassuring personalities than that of Mr. Register, but we haven't contacted them. The man was a pillar of comfort. Which was good. For if he had been a man with a worried expression or a jittery manner we would have made for the small boats.

• • • •

But enough. After Washington it cleared. The trip then became a thing of incredible beauty and comfort. From Jacksonville on it was by full moon, close to the glistening ocean. The cities of Florida sparkled below like displays of wondrous jewels. Here and there a small town flamed like a hot coal. We were air-minded now. It was like something out of a fairy tale. Miami was reached in what seemed like a mere half hour of matchless beauty aloft.

• • • •

"Only way to travel. Zip! . . . and you're there," said Carson. "Can you imagine ever traveling any other way?" I asked. We shook the hand of Capt. Dice and Steward Register. They laughed a little. They had seen others as apprehensive and fidgety as we had been. But we had never seen anybody as steady, as reassuring and as efficient as they had been.

• • • •

P. S. It's the only way to travel. Zip! . . . And you're there!

Mexico's Protest

To The League of Nations.

Noting that Article 10 of the Covenant guaranteeing the territorial integrity of members of the League of Nations has not been invoked in the case of Austria, the Mexican government has forwarded the following communication to Geneva:

THE MANNER and the circumstances of the political death of Austria constitute a serious transgression of the Covenant of the League of Nations and of the sacred principles of international law. Austria has ceased to exist as an independent state by means of foreign aggression which flagrantly violates our Covenant as well as the Treaty of Versailles-St. Germain that consecrates the inalienable independence of Austria. This inalienability should have been respected, not only by the great signatory powers to the Geneva Protocol of 1922 in which it was solemnly declared that they would respect the political independence, the territorial integrity and the sovereignty of Austria, but by the Austrian government itself, since those treaties impose the obligation on Austria of at least obtaining the assent of the League Council as to the maintenance of her independence within her present borders as a separate state, master of her decisions (the Permanent Court of International Justice at The Hague. Resolution V, September, 1931). Therefore, any agreement or decision impairing Austrian independence must be considered illegal; likewise, all negotiations by any authorities with any foreign government that are contrary to such principles and obligations must be considered arbitrary and inadmissible by the members of the League of Nations.

THE FACT that the Vienna authorities turned the national power over to the invader cannot be an excuse in behalf of the aggressor, nor must the League of Nations accept fait accompli without emphatic protests and without reactions as outlined by articles of the Covenant. Furthermore, the authorities that abandoned the executive power, do not represent the Austrian people who surely contemplate the death of their country as a tragedy; those very same authorities that yielded to force did not act freely, for voluntas coactas voluntas non est. Consequently, the member states of the League of Nations must not consider the words and deeds of those authorities as a free and legal expression of the subjected nation.

The government of Mexico, ever respectful of the principles of the League Covenant, and consistent with its international policy of never recognizing any conquest accomplished by force, categorically and emphatically protests against the foreign aggression of which the Austrian republic is a victim, and at the same time declares to the whole world that in its judgment the only manner of attaining peace and of avoiding new international transgressions and outrages, as those in Ethiopia, in Spain, in China and in Austria, is to comply with the obligations outlined in the Covenant, in the signed treaties and in the principles of international law; otherwise, the world unfortunately will fall in the grip of a much more serious conflagration than the one it is now attempting to avoid outside the League system.

British Press

"Popular" Newspapers Of England, Not Pillars Of Respectability, Seen Upholding Rights Of Free Press And Free Speech.

By David Wills.
Special Correspondence of The Post.

London.

THE BRITISH PRESS is proud of its freedom, and perhaps equally proud of its sense of voluntary restraint. We, thank God, are not as others are. We temper our newsgathering zeal with a British sense of proportion, a British sense of responsibility, a British knowledge of what is done, and what is not done.

These sentiments must seem absurd, mere British humbug, to those who pick up our Daily Express, which has swollen its circulation to near the 2,500,000 mark by means of light, frivolous, intimate, newsy writing with a heart throb in it, which we are pleased to describe as American journalism. They must seem equally absurd to those who read our Daily Mirror, over the million circulation in proof that a leg a day, the prettier the leg the better, is good business.

British Press Splits Into Gentlemen And Cads.

BUT THE British press is divided into gentlemen and cads. These are of course the categories as seen from the gentleman's angle. There is the responsible press, and the popular press. The former is fairly strictly limited, in its own opinion, to the Times, the Telegraph, the Sunday Observer, the Sunday Times, and a scattering of provincial papers. Their combined circulation is less than that of the smallest of the four national popular dailies. But their combined influence, and their combined sense of their own virtues, bears a much higher ratio to that of the popular papers.

If you take this responsible press at its own valuation, you would quite naturally see it the guardian of the rights of free speech, of freedom to report unbiased news, and to speak a free opinion, no matter how objectionable these practices may be to those who would benefit by silence.

Yet Dr. Dietrich, press chief of the German government, is finding friends among our responsibles, and critics among our contemptibles. Dr. Dietrich, new convert to Mr. Hull's system of promoting world peace by mutual trade pacts, offers us a press pact; Germany is willing to make a press treaty with any country willing to control its own press. If we don't tell the truth about him, he won't tell lies about us; what offer could be fairer than that?

The odd thing is that the self-named responsible British press is willing to consider this proposal; defense of the traditions of free speech is confined at present to the papers whose names stink in the nostrils of the righteous.

Conservative Organs Side With Chamberlain.

FOR THE Times, the Telegraph, the Observer and the Sunday Times are all conservative organs, all favoring an understanding with Mussolini and Hitler not only for the peace of Europe but also as a deliberate choice of the more reactionary in preference to the more radical.

The Times' sense of responsibility required it to omit adverse comment on Mr. Chamberlain in the Eden crisis from Dominions or the United States, and to refrain from printing letters from readers in the same strain. The Telegraph's zeal for impartial news permitted it to print an absurdly inadequate description of American reaction to the crisis; the Telegraph obviously thought that American criticism of Chamberlain was unjustified, and therefore dismissed it as unreal. The Observer campaigns with increasing frenzy for White Man Franco, Hero Mussolini, Savior Hitler, and shudders to think of news which might appear to diminish the stature of its idols.

This section of the press is willing to speak softly of Mister Hitler, to shut its eyes to matters of purely internal concern to Germany, if by doing so it can advance the prospect of agreement between Britain, Germany and Italy. To Mr. Chamberlain, a restraint on the British press must seem a small price to pay for an understanding—too small a price to boggle over.

Self-Imposed Censorship Can Accomplish Desires.

TO CONTROL the British press does not of course require any official act, any discussion and action by Parliament. It is highly improbable that Parliament would for one moment consider passing a press censorship law as such. But the willing section of the press is already prepared to find virtue in Nazi Germany, and to the Germans the criticisms which will continue in some of the papers can be described as of no importance, the mouthings of jealous irresponsibles.

Although no censorship law is probable, some effort may be made to restrain the papers' freedom of speech. The energy of the popular press in intruding upon private lives in the search for copy, no matter how much individuals may be inconvenienced, has provoked demands for laws to control the press.

A bill is soon to be introduced in the House for registration of journalists, for professional purposes, but it may be possible to use this bill for more than the profession intends. The libel laws are already a serious restraint upon the free speech of the press, and may easily become much more drastic in the hand of the courts.

Even more specific action might be taken. Holland, a democratic country, has a law which restrains the press in commenting upon the heads of foreign countries; under this law it would have been impossible, for example, for the famous Vanity Fair cartoon of Hirohito and the rickshaw to have appeared. It is not impossible that some such measure might be introduced here.

Behind-Scenes Agreement Will Win Majority Support.

WHATEVER is done, will be done quietly, without open attack on the privileges of the press; indeed, it will be done ostensibly in order to protect and preserve those privileges. A quiet agreement behind the scenes, as was so easily obtained and for so long maintained during the Windsor-Simpson affair, can be much more effective. Of course, on this present issue it will be impossible to obtain agreement between all the papers, as over the Windsor business, but substantial agreement will be obtainable among those papers which have assumed to themselves a fancied monopoly of impartiality, responsibility, and the prestige of being semiofficial.

The honor of the British press will be maintained by those papers, chief among them the Manchester Guardian, whose continued presentation of the truth as they see it will be minimized by the respectable press as irresponsible, mistaken, unfortunate and calculated to disturb peaceful international relations.

'Biscuit Pan' Road Increases Drivers' Sight, Cuts Glare

Boston, March 21 (AP).—A new type of road surface that will "increase visibility very greatly" was reported today at the seventeenth annual Massachusetts Safety Conference.

C. A. B. Halvorson, of the General Electric Co., announced the new road, designed to allow drivers to see farther at night without glare. Crux of the problem, he said, was to find a road surface that would do its job as well in wet weather as in dry.

The new design looks like a biscuit pan. Little "cups" pit the road at intervals of an inch. They are one-quarter of an inch deep and half an inch in diameter. Mixed with this indented surface is a substance, such as quartzite, which gives a high reflectivity. The "biscuit pan" road catches the water, which cuts down visibility.

Between Acts Of Aggression.

LITHUANIA has capitulated to Poland and Czechoslovakia has sought to forestall the anticipated pressure from Germany by making additional concessions to the Germans within its borders.

Momentarily these developments plus the fatalistic attitude displayed by the outside powers toward Hitler's rape of Austria have led to a slight easing of international tensions. But it would be over-opthmistic in the extreme to presume that this breathing spell will be of particularly long duration.

The dour fact must be recognized that the aggressors will not stay put. They cannot. They must move from victory to victory. And if these victories cannot be achieved in peaceful ways they must be sought at the point of the bayonet.

The prospect is not a pleasant one. But it is a prospect the world of peace-loving nations can ignore only to their own peril.

IN JAPAN'S case the forward movement of territorial expansion has been going on for more than 40 years.

The seizure of the Loochoo Islands was followed, after a fairly long interval, by the annexation of Formosa as a result of the victory over China in 1895 and then, after a shorter interval, by the establishment of a Japanese foothold in Manchuria and by the annexation of Korea.

The German islands of the South Pacific and Southern Sakhalin came next. But Japan's appetite has proved insatiable. Not even Manchuria, an area as large as France and Germany combined, has proved more than an appetizer to the militarists of the island empire.

The Japanese barely established themselves in control of that region when they began to push out into Inner Mongolia and North China and now nothing short of the domination of all China will satisfy them.

• • • •

ITALY OBVIOUSLY did not stop with the annexation of Ethiopia. It was not long after the victorious entry of Italian troops into Addis Ababa that Italian forces were being sent to Spain. There the goal is not annexation, except possibly of the Balearics, but domination.

Nonetheless, the effect of Italian aggression in Spain on the international situation has been vastly disturbing. And there is no reason to believe that Mussolini is prepared to stop with Spain. He is driven on through inner compulsion to seek ever new worlds to conquer.

In Hitler's case the chart of aggression has been drawn up in advance. Much of the German expansionist program that finds advocacy in "Mein Kampf" has already been achieved. The presumption must, therefore, be that the Fuehrer will seek to continue along the course he has laid out for his nation. And the ease with which he has managed to achieve his successes will certainly not persuade him of the wisdom of restraint.

• • • •

IT IS OF MORE than passing significance that these "incidents" which have so disturbed and alarmed the world of late have tended to increase both in number and ferocity with the passage of the years.

When Japan invaded Manchuria in 1931, for instance, its military progress was accompanied by flanking moves in the field of diplomacy. Before each advance the ground was carefully sounded out. There was at first no certainty that the United States would content herself with writing notes of protest or that Great Britain would do even less or that the League of Nations would prove impotent. Thus Japan had to act with at least some measure of caution.

No such tactics were needed last year when the undeclared war on China was begun. The protests of the powers could, at first, be ignored. It was only when the Japanese armies tended to get bogged down in the interior of the republic that some attention began to be paid to British and American protests.

• • • •

CONTRAST Italy's careful maneuvers in the period before the invasion of Ethiopia and during the early months of that war and the insulting attitude displayed by Mussolini toward the democratic powers throughout the Spanish civil war. And contrast the care with which Hitler warned the world of his impending reoccupation of the Rhineland, thus allowing himself a means of retreat had the powers shown a readiness to act against him, and the way he suddenly pounced on Austria.

Clearly the dictators are on the march. Contemptuous of the opposition they have hitherto encountered whenever they have embarked on aggressions, they feel they can now and for some time to come go ahead with impunity. And their satellites among the smaller powers—the Polish ultimatum to Lithuania is a case in point—feel that the present is also a time for them to get what they want by the application of brute force.

• • • •

THE FACT remains, however, that at some stage or other along the road of domination opposition of a serious kind is bound to be encountered. For instance, Japan is now finding the path of conquest no longer a bed of roses as it was in the past.

Although the other powers with interests in the Far East have carefully refrained from intervening in the situation, a circumstance which the Japanese reckoned on, the extent and nature of Chinese resistance has been most upsetting to the war lords of Nippon. And the longer that resistance continues the greater the possibility of outside intervention. For with each passing month it may become easier—and safer—for other powers to intervene.

But what China has done and what the Spanish republicans against ovewhelming odds have done others will do. Sooner or later, therefore, a final showdown is bound to take place, with retreat impossible and capitulation, even in the name of peace, out of the question. Then the fat will truly be in the fire.

Is the world near that point? Probably not. With the democratic powers still floundering about in a sea of indecision, the dictatorships are still in a position to gain easy victories here and there merely by pressure of armed force. But that is no endless process.

Sooner or later some vital nerve will be touched—say Czechoslovakia—and then the world will go up in flame unless, in the meantime, the peaceful nations effectively organize themselves and constitute so overwhelming an aggregation of force that no dictator, however war-minded, will take the risk of an attack.

Russian Crime

By Walter Duranty

I DO NOT KNOW how many professional criminals there are in Russia, but the number is surely large because it is such a vast country and so new and undeveloped, and people everywhere are moving, building great steel towns in the empty steppes and gigantic factories, irrigation projects or power dams among the mountains, swamps and rivers . . .

In capitalist countries habitual criminals are regarded as the worst enemies of society, but Russians think a term like parasites, or the maladjusted, more accurate and suitable.

WHY IS IT that if a Russian should write about Stalin or Voroshiloff the way Dorothy Thompson has written about the President or Mr. Farley—he wouldn't get the chance, but just suppose—he would probably be shot? Or that a girl who kills her mother with a hatchet receives a maximum penalty of eight years at a penal colony where she is allowed to marry and have children; whereas a man who steals a hatchet from a collective farm is liable to death, and men have been shot for petty thefts like that?

In point of fact, the answer is simple and not without its logic; the Bolsheviks make a sharp distinction between crime against the state and crime against the individual. The former is antisocial and damnable; the latter is naughtiness to be corrected.

THE KEY to the puzzle of Soviet criminal jurisprudence, which has recently proved so baffling to Western opinion, is the fact that the state has been virtually deified and that individuals have no importance except insofar as they are cogs in the state machine. Thus any form of opposition to the state is not merely treason, but blasphemy, which must ruthlessly be eradicated. I would go further and say that even doubt of the state's policies has become a major sin, because doubt leads to dissent, dissent to opposition, opposition to conspiracy, conspiracy to treason and treason to the firing squad. How TVA Fight Was Climaxed

"If He Cannot Accede, It Is His Duty to Resign," Partial Transcript Discloses the President Said of A. E. Morgan at Third Parley.

A partial transcript of the conference held yesterday in President Roosevelt's office between the President and Chairman Arthur E. Morgan, Vice Chairman Harcourt Morgan and Director David Lilienthal, of the Tennessee Valley Authority, follows:

Under the Constitution of the United States, the Chief Executive is directly charged to "take care that the laws be faithfully executed." I have been confronted for some time with a threat to the continued successful functioning of the Tennessee Valley Authority, a great executive agency. And let me say at this point that, on the whole, considering that this was a great experiment in Government, an experiment intended to help the lives and the social conditions under which millions of people live, as such an experiment it has been proved successful. I think we have accomplished great things for the people of the whole Tennessee watershed.

But of late we have all of us been confronted with certain conditions which threaten the continued successful operation of this great experiment. I go back 14 months to January, 1937, when in a public speech and articles in the public press one of the three members, the chairman of the board of directors of the Authority, seemed to intimate, but without specifications or supporting evidence, that he doubted the integrity of his fellow members.

Things went on until in December, 1937, the constitutionality of the TVA act was at stake in a lawsuit that had been brought by 18 utility companies. I think it was a matter of almost public record—the record of the time—for it was mentioned in the press and the record that has been brought out last week and the week before—that during this litigation Chairman Morgan widely disseminated within the authority's organization charges of unethical professional conduct against the attorneys, the counsel for the TVA—who were in charge of litigation, again without specification or evidence.

Memorandum Recalled.

On January 18 this year the majority members submitted to me, without publicity, and it was, in fact, not published in any way, an official memorandum complaining of certain specific kinds of unpermissible conduct on the part of Arthur E. Morgan, including the making of unsupported charges, including an unwillingness to co-operate in carrying out devisions of a majority of the board, and including serious interference with the work of key members of the authority's staff in the performance of their duties. In contrast to Arthur E. Morgan's charges against them, the complaint of the majority against him did not charge him with dishonesty or lack of integrity. I think that is a fact that directly bears on the pro's and con's of this inquiry.

On March 3 and March 5, 1938, Arthur E. Morgan made extensive and unequivocal charges of dishonesty and lack of integrity in public office on the part of the majority members—again in the public press—and again without specifications or evidence.

Despite my long personal friendship for Arthur E. Morgan and my appreciation of his many public services in the past, this action by him compelled action by me.

As Chief Executive constitutionally responsible for the faithful execution of the Tennessee Valley Authority Act, I could not ignore charges of dishonesty, bad faith and conspiracy in its administration.

In fairness to Dr. Harcourt Morgan and Mr. David Lilienthal, in fairness to them as public officials and as American citizens, I had to make public at that time their accusations of obstruction against Arthur E. Morgan because, without notice to me, he had made public his accusations of dishonesty against them. I could not wash my hands of these grave and libelous charges against men whose alleged guilt had not been proven, any more than I can today wash my hands of these charges because of the possibility or the probability that at some later date they may be investigated by another branch or branches of the Federal Government.

Only Wanted Truth.

Therefore, I summoned the three members of the board of the TVA to appear before me on March 11, face to face with each other, to present such facts as they might have to support the serious charges which they had made. It was not a formal court proceeding, but a simple and fair way to get the truth—to let each confront the other and tell his story in straightforward nontechnical words.

I informed the members that I was concerned at this particular inquiry not with the pros and cons of TVA policy, but with their charges of dishonesty on the one hand and misconduct on the other.

As a matter of law and common sense, when there is dissension within a multiple-headed executive agency, it is difficult to draw the line where dissent becomes obstruction. I have serious doubt as to the propriety of a number of things which Arthur E. Morgan did in an effort to create a situation in which he could force an acceptance of his own ideas. But just so long as we have multiple-headed administrative boards we ought to allow considerable latitude for human discretion and not frighten a minority into acquiescence. Therefore, I have sought to resolve every doubt in favor of Arthur E. Morgan. Nevertheless, significance does attach to the multiplying of these instances in which he trespassed into doubtful territory.

For example, the majority members proffered facts tending to show that Arthur E. Morgan did not send a telegram to me as directed by the board. Although here in this case Arthur E. Morgan may have committed only a technical wrong, he having testified that he had changed his mind, an instance of this sort, standing alone, would have no significance; but, taken in the light of many other acts, the chain, the whole chain, must be given significance.

The majority members also offered facts tending to show—and I think I should say fairly show—on the face of them that Arthur E. Morgan interfered with and obstructed the Tennessee Valley Authority counsel in vitally important constitutional litigation which affected the very life of the authority, a litigation to which I have previously referred.

At this second hearing, Arthur E. Morgan persisted in his refusal to participate in any inquiry to ascertain facts regarding his charges of dishonesty and want of integrity, although in a prepared statement he referred "by way of illustration" to certain facts and circumstances tending to show that the Berry marble claims were worthless and that there was reason to suspect the bona fides of the claims. But there is absolutely no evidence before me that the majority members of the board ever contended either that these marble deposits had any commercial value or that they themselves had no reason to suspect the bona fides of the claims.

The evidence shows on the contrary that claims aggregating millions had been filed against the Government; that the majority of the board were as deeply concerned about them as was Arthur E. Morgan; and that the board's counsel was endeavoring to obtain all available evidence to oppose the claims both on the ground that the marble was commercially valueless and that the claims were not advanced in good faith.

The majority members, acting on the advice of TVA counsel, believed that it would tend to protect rather than hurt the Government's case if an independent expert under a conciliation agreement made a report on the value of the marble deposits without binding either the authority or the claimants in any way.

When this procedure was proposed at a board meeting, Arthur E. Morgan objected to it. As a member of the board he had a right to do so. He believed, apparently, that despite the express terms of the agreement it would in some way adversely affect the rights of the authority to contest the claims. The majority members, conscious of the hazards of any litigation and not having as yet unearthed any legal or direct evidence of the bad faith which they nevertheless suspected, were equally within their rights in voting to adopt the procedure that had been suggested by the authority's counsel. There is not the slightest basis for Arthur E. Morgan's imputing bad faith to the majority members because they and the authority's counsel differed with him on technical points of legal procedure, and it seems clear to me that it is strange and, I think, unwarranted for Arthur E. Morgan on the one hand to complain that as a layman he cannot adequately explain to me why his colleagues acted improperly and, on the other hand, as a layman to take it upon himself to accuse his colleagues of gross misconduct in the handling of a lawsuit. Arthur E. Morgan's whole attitude toward this inquiry in itself gives credence to the charge that he has been unwilling to co-operate with his fellow directors in the administration of the act and that he is temperamentally unfitted to exercise a divided authority. His fellow directors have responded as a matter of course and have given specifications to support their grievances. With the exception of a few fragmentary questions and answers on the Berry marble claims, Arthur E. Morgan has stood aloof and refused to co-operate in this proceeding or even to supply the simplest facts asked of him by his own administrative superior, the Chief Executive. The contrast is obvious. The contrast is disheartening. I have tried to be mindful of the debt the public owes to Arthur E. Morgan for past services, of his sense of the righteousness of his own convictions, and of the patience with which the public interest demands that a situation of this kind be worked out if possible. I have therefore struggled with this problem for over a year, and, in its present acute form, for six months. I have been patient.

But, as I have said before, there is a limit to patience. I must greatly consider the position in which Dr. Harcourt Morgan and David Lilienthal find themselves. Some decision on this record is due to them, in all fairness.

Finally, I must also consider the consequence of permitting the establishment of a precedent whereby any subordinate in the executive branch of the Government can refuse to give to his superior or to the Chief Executive himself facts sought in order to straighten out difficulties which he charges exist in his own departmental work; can refuse accountability to the Chief Executive for his actions as a member of the executive branch, even though he be charged with misconduct in office; and can insist that orderly executive functioning and discipline be maintained only through the processes of legislative committees. It is worthwhile to consider what would happen to the efficiency of Government in any of its executive functions if this suggestion were made the general rule. Obviously, the Congress has full power of investigation but, obviously also, the Constitution of the United States declares that "the executive power shall be vested in a President of the United States." Under such circumstances indulgence of my personal wish to continue my patience with Arthur E. Morgan would be unfair to my colleagues, to his Government and to the public. I therefore feel obligated to act upon the evidence now before me.

On that evidence I am obliged to find that:

(a) Arthur E. Morgan has failed to sustain the grave and libelous charges of dishonesty and want of integrity which he has made against his fellow directors; his conduct in this respect is legally and morally unjustified;

(b) On the face of the record, the charges of the other directors that Arthur E. Morgan has obstructed the work and injured the morale of the organization of the Tennessee Valley Authority must be accepted as true; he has refused to offer testimony in denial of the charges;

(c) Arthur E. Morgan is guilty of insubordination and contumacy in refusing to submit to the Chief Executive's demand for any facts upon which he based charges of dishonesty and want of integrity on the part of his fellow directors.

Under these circumstances, I feel myself under the painful duty of requesting Arthur E. Morgan at once publicly to withdraw the charges that he has made impugning the honesty, good faith, integrity, and motives of his fellow directors, and to give to them and to the country assurances that he will, in the future, loyally cooperate with his fellow directors in carrying out the provisions of the Tennessee Valley Authority act.

I make this request of him.

If he cannot accede, it is his duty to resign.

I hope—I deeply hope—that Arthur E. Morgan will not make it necessary for me to take further action. He has had ample time and ample opportunity to make his decision. If he determines to follow neither of these courses, I will give him until tomorrow, Tuesday, 2:30 p. m., on March 22, to present to me in person or in writing any reason why, as Chief Executive, I should not take further action in the case as a necessary result of the findings which I have just read to him.

For your information, Chairman Morgan, I must tell you frankly, in the light of the record, that only two courses appear open—either your removal or your suspension as a member of the Board of the Tennessee Valley Authority.

Have any of you gentlemen anything to say?

CHAIRMAN MORGAN: Mr. President, I deny the accuracy and the adequacy and representativeness of the statement you made. I have no other statements to make here now except these: It is my judgment that my resignation at this time would not be in the public interest. Therefore, I do not tender my resignation. I wish also to say that I challenge the suggestion and deny the right and the power to remove or to suspend me.

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

Popular Girl Loses Best-Loved Beau After Permitting Him Latitude in Lovemaking; What to Do?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Formerly contemptuous of girls who turned to you for advice, now I find myself in the same boat. I have always been a popular girl, with plenty of beaux and no trouble with any of them. But now I find myself having trouble with the one boy I want most. When we first met, he asked me for a date at once, but as I had other plans, I put him off, but later gave him a date. I knew, after that date, that I liked him better than any boy I had ever known.

* * * *

After ten days, he called for another date, and as I was free that evening, I gave it to him. Two nights later he called again (about 7 o'clock each night). Now it is against my principle to accept a date at the last minute and I rarely do, but on these occasions I was free and I did want to go, so throwing my good judgment to the winds, I went. He seemed to like me a lot; but when I asked him, a few days later, to a sorority affair, he said he thought he had to work but would let me know. Eventually he declined, but asked me for another date. Again I went.

* * * *

That last night, on the way home, he went a little far. At first I resisted, but later responded. However, it was he who, in the end, stopped things from going too far. Blame it on the drinks we had; or say he was just plain "fast"—but what boys aren't, in this modern age? Since that night I have neither seen nor heard from him. For some reason, I expected it and tried to reconcile myself to it, but after three weeks I find I can't.

* * * *

You will probably suggest surrounding myself with other boys; to let him see he isn't the only one. I have. I've had a date with a different boy every night this week. I'm dated up until the middle of next week. But what good does it do? He doesn't know it. I never see him any place I go and these other boys aren't taking my mind off him. Maybe the reason he's on my mind is because he's the only boy I ever wanted that I couldn't get. What do you suggest? I am looking forward to your answer with new hope. PUZZLED.

Beginning of Wisdom.

DEAR PUZZLED: Chalk this experience up to the beginning of wisdom; to the illuminating first-hand discovery that you are neither omniscient nor fortune's favorite child; that there will always be some things in this world that you will see and want and cannot have; and that now and again, even as others, you will have problems on which you will need to seek—with honesty, courage and humility—someone else's advice.

* * * *

Frankly, I see nothing to do about this defeat—be it temporary or permanent—but let it ride. You defeated yourself, really, by being too sure of yourself entirely. Your erstwhile conquests had led you to believe you could go against the rules of the game. Moreover, you were a bit too precipitate or greedy in grabbing after what you wanted. Also, you probably sickened the boy's spirit in making it necessary for him to "stop things from going too far," after you had first coquettishly resisted, and then completely responded, to his advances. Call him "fast," if you like; but call yourself, as well, "cheap" and "easy." For that, no doubt, is the way he feels about you.

* * * *

It's no feat to stand one's ground, to live by principle, when one is rejecting temptations, so-called, that do not really tempt. The test of character is to live by principle when something you really want hangs in the balance. You made what concession you did to this boy, no doubt, simply through fear of losing his favor if you stuck to your guns. You were using an unfair weapon for ensnaring him; that, I think, you must admit, and while he may subconsciously realize and resent that fact, the major reason for his recoil from the association is dismay at finding you so vulnerable. As I have said here time and again, it is—in the very nature of courtship—man's prerogative to propose and woman's to dispose. Because a man invites, it does not necessarily follow that a woman must accept. She may thank him prettily for the compliment, stare him down for the presumption, evade the implication, or, in innumerable other ways, preserve the spirit as well as the letter of her aloofness, without dealing a death blow to their relationship.

* * * *

I should say that a girl whose chastity had to be preserved for her by the man, in a romantic encounter, is a girl who has never felt, or shown, any real concern about preserving it by herself. I wonder, indeed, if you have been buying popularity by dispensing casual favors; stopping short of "going too far" only because you weren't emotionally moved and because the boy wasn't so fascinating that he couldn't be dispensed with if necessary. Continuously practiced lowering of moral standards and spiritual barriers leaves a girl pretty defenseless in an encounter with a man who really attracts her. She finds herself defeated in the end by that very expediency she had cultivated as a conquering weapon. If such is the truth in your case, you have come just the cropper you need for recovering your senses and getting back on the right track.

* * * *

I'm dubious about the sort of popularity which fills a girl's social calendar with dates, for 10 consecutive days, with 10 different admirers—when she can't hold the attention of the one man she wants. Something is wrong with that picture. Figure it out for yourself. Maybe these boys don't care any more for you, really, than you care for them. They represent idle diversion to you; you are probably just a play-girl to them; and a girl who is so busy playing that she isn't taking enough time out to invite her own soul; to develop distinctive personality; a cultivated mind; a reasoned code of ethics; to hold herself to a high standard of conduct and association, and so have something vital and exclusive and valuable to bring to special relationships. The best advice I can give you is to stop running around in circles; to set a higher standard for yourself than that of making a conquest of every personable boy you meet; to do more reading, thinking and self-searching; to be a little more the self-contained lady, and a little less the hail-fellow-well-met blithe spirit when you meet this boy again, as you eventually will, of course.

YOUR FIGURE, MADAME!

By Ida Jean Kain.

WHATEVER our own occupation we are likely to think it is the reason for all our figure troubles. The housewife's work is never done and she has no time for exercise. The secretary blames her hipline inches on a desk chair job . . . and even a figure columnist has a pretty tough time living up to her own advice!

Then for recreation we go to a theatre or concert and envy the glamorous creatures who have nothing to do but keep beautiful. Take the concert pianist—all she has to do is practice six to eight hours a day. She is practically tied to the piano bench! And sitting adds to a pianist's hip inches at the same rate it does to a stenographer's.

Hortense Monath, the slender, graceful Newark girl, who ranks as one of the country's outstanding concert pianists, says she has to reckon seriously with this handicap of her chosen career. As a women performer she has to have eye appeal as well as ear appeal. She must present a graceful carriage and slender figure as she walks on and off the stage.

Fast Walks Necessary.

Miss Monath declares it takes extreme measures to counteract hours of practice. Endowed with a superb heritage of physical vigor and vitality, she has chosen a rigorous program of outdoor activity and calisthenics. She walks from four to five miles every day, and gets the most out of this activity by crowding it into a brief hour. This is a stiff pace, but Miss Monath adopted the European habit of cross-country walking at the age of 16 when she went abroad for her musical education and she finds it an enjoyable recreation.

For anyone who has been sitting all day, walking in the fresh air at a brisk pace is the best possible exercise, but to get the most out of it, sedentary workers should follow the example of this pianist and walk in correct posture. Her tip is to walk with the body held as if an imaginary line ran straight from the ears, shoulders, hips, back of the knees and heels. Such a stance automatically squares the shoulders, forces the chest up, tucks in the hips and allows for an easy, swinging stride. Be sure to keep your head high, too.

Special Exercise a Pip!

But there are some special exercises which this young artist has good reason to recommend. As you might suppose, they are designed to keep a slim hipline in spite of hours of sitting. Her favorite is the "dry swimming" back stroke executed on a low trestle. You can use the bed, lying on the back with the hips slightly off the edge for leeway. Begin with the legs doubled up in a jacknife position, knees bent to chest and feet together. Kick the legs out straight, swing them in wide circles outward, and back together, returning to original position. Repeat three times and increase at your own risk! It is a wonderfully effective exercise, but we would think that after doing this swim stroke Miss Monath might limp a bit as she goes on the stage. You try it!

If you will counteract the effects of your occupation with this type of exercise and will walk five miles a day, you won't have any hips!

Dotted Ensemble for Spring Verve

By Ethel Ehlen,
The Post Fashion Editor.

DOTS, important style news in the spring collections, are appearing in just about 1,001 different interpretations; pin dots and polka dots, those in the shape of stars after Schiaparelli, disc dots of varying sizes, and balloon dots, are appearing in frocks, costume suits and redingote ensembles.

Dots are being used for complete ensembles, sometimes without benefit of any contrast whatsoever; dots are also combined with materials of solid colors. Unlike some of the prints, dotted fabrics are adaptable to all types of figures, and they are ageless—as suitable for the schoolgirl as they are for her mother.

The dotted dress and accompanying coat, above, in polka dots is cleverly trimmed with kidskin; the leather used for the coat collar, buttons and belt. The coat could accompany frocks of solid color and the frock be worn with coats or jackets in the color of the background. Available in such combinations as black or navy and white trimmed in black, white or bright contrasts; wine and white with blue kidskin, and stone blue and white with the leather trim in Parisand.

A WOMAN'S NEW YORK

By Alice Hughes

New York, March 21.

WHEN DOLORES DEL RIO and her husband, Cedric Gibbons, chugged in one the Queen Mary a few days ago, they received about as shocking a welcome as could come to a Mexican lady who, for an amazing number of years, has been one of the movies' tremendous beauties.

ALICE HUGHES

No sooner had a dainty Del Rio toe touched the pier than she was handed a telegram beginning "Worst storm in history of California. Many killed. Thousands of homes destroyed." At this point the svelte senorita seriously considered throwing a good old faint, since the Gibbons family is very fond of its little Santa Monica palace. But Cedric saved the wife's consciousness by skipping to the last line of the terrifying wire, which read "But your house was not damaged." All of a sudden Delicious Delores felt fine again, the sun shone and the birdies sang, and she told me all about it.

She and Mr. G. got off the Roma at Fez, Morocco, and at that African town she came down with what local medicos called appendicitis. Not wishing to be excavated in Fez, the Gibbonses rushed hither and thither by plane, finally winding up where all good Americans used to go—Paris. There the appendicitis suddenly ceased. Whereupon she went about every woman's proper Parisian business—shopping. During her store travels she picked up some lovely bits of the "junk" jewelry now such a madness—it's fashionable and expensive, whatever its nickname.

I was interested to note that Dolores carries a "pasaporte," being a Mexican, and that her name in the book is what Broadway calls her "square monicker"—Dolores Assunsolo de Gibbons, if you please. And that book also carries absolute proof of her beauty, if anyone ever doubted it. She actually looks very lovely in her passport-picture! This may sound incredible, but it's true!

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—The great conductor, Maestro Toscanini, left us the other day after completing his historic series of radio broadcasts. Before he boarded the Queen Mary, he was given a bang-up bye-bye party in a home decorated as a night club. Notables waited on table and six social ladies did the can-can for the artist's delight. This isn't as strange as it sounds, for the marvelous little man delights in a spot of night-clubbing occasionally, and had several during his visit this winter. He is always given the finest table, and all the star entertainers come over to be presented to the greatest living stick-waver. This is just another proof that he is a very human being as well as a master artist.

The interesting gadget invented by Fred Waring, the band leader, has just popped into the local market. It's a liquifier—with the help of a little water and some electricity the dingus can turn practically anything into a drink. Things like bananas and carrots and spinach, for instance. Fred once told me that he hopes his invention will soon free him from bossing a band.

New Mainbocher Gowns for Spring Wired for Sound

Paris (U.P.).—The "fourth dimension" in clothes this year is sound, and its Einsteinian discoverer is Mainbocher, whose spring showing of evening gowns fairly tinkle with "girandole" embroideries in silver, gold, and jet black. Elfin noises come from pendants and pallettes that make bell-like sounds with the movement of the skirt.

There also are headdresses worn squarely on top of the head—little gold or silver wire trees, with tiny ornaments of pastel glass that sway and tinkle like old-fashioned chandelier dingle-dangles.

Of course, the same effect can't quite be achieved for more practical daytime wear, but a woman may pin on her suitjacket or afternoon frock a spray of lilies-of-the-valley, whose gold flowers will tinkle as no lily of the field ever did.

Family Tastes Govern Cooks In Yugoslavia

Husband's Whim Criterion, Not Scientific Value, Says Writer.

By Jean Green.

PLEASING rather than scientific value is the criterion used by the Yugoslavic hostess in planning her menus, according to Slavko Cerick, political writer and staff member of the Library of Congress.

"The meals in Yugoslavia are planned to please the husband," he said. "The manner of preparing a dish does not depend on the recipe but on family likes and dislikes. The seasonings, herbs and spices are changed to suit the whim of a husband. If a new dish is tried and the husband does not approve, it is not served again. Dishes that are popular are made in quantities to last for two days.

"In my country, the husband is always at home for the noon meal. Business offices close for three hours during the day and this allows ample time for all members of the family to enjoy the meal together. There is no change of menu when guests arrive unexpectedly. A good hostess is prepared for guests every day."

Noon Meals Heavy.

The noon meal starts with shlivovitsa, continues with soup, a main dish of vegetables and meat seasoned to perfection and served on the flat dish or Pjat. In the summer season a salad is served. For dessert there is usually milk pudding or torte.

The national dish is a sarma. This dish has both Slavic and Turkish origin and illustrates the way in which gastronomic tastes have been changed by the union of the two races. Rice served with a highly seasoned sauce forms the best of this dish.

Cooking is a hobby of Mr. Cerick and his friends are glad of that. He often brings the culinary art of his interesting country to his table by preparing the main dish for small parties.

The grape leaves needed for its preparation can be purchased at a Washington shop. The buttermilk is a thick milk that is filled with curds. This rceipe serves 25 persons.

Sarma.

2 pounds of ground pork
2 pounds of ground lamb
1 can of tomatoes or 4 fresh tomatoes
5 large onions
1 stick of butter
2 pounds of rice
Garlic
Paprika
Pepper
Salt

Grape Leaves Needed.

Make the sauce by adding the chopped onion to the tomato. Simmer until the onions are transparent. Season with the red pepper, pepper, paprika and salt. Steam the rice and add to the sauce.

Blend the ground pork and lamb. Add 4 or 5 eggs to the meat and mix well. Add the lemon juice. Place enough butter in a frying pan to cover the bottom. Place in the oven and heat until the meat has lost its color. Then mix the meat with the sauce and rice.

Fresh grape leaves can be used in season. They should be cooked in water to which a small amount of vinegar has been added and heated until the color changes. In winter months, canned grape leaves are necessary. These are packed in thick layers and their separation is a delicate operation. It is best to heat them first in hot water, then separate them gently. Turn each leaf on its face. Put the meat and rice in the grape leaves, twirl as for a crepe susette and place in baking pan. The leaves should be lined up in pyramid fashion and water poured over them to cover. Add the rest of butter and one-half pint of Burgundy wine. Cook for 2 hours.

Serve With Salad.

Serve on a flat dish with a thick buttermilk sauce. This sauce can be prepared in advance. The buttermilk needed is called "yurt." Processed dairy buttermilk can be used if heated gently on top of the stove until thick.

Thick Buttermilk Sauce.

1 quart of buttermilk
Juice of 2 lemons
Red paprika
French mayonnaise

Add the lemon juice to the buttermilk and mix well. Add enough paprika to color and French mayonnaise to make smooth and of good consistency. Heat gently on top of the stove, then pour over the sarma just before serving.

Mr. Cerick recommends that this dish be served in the American home with a salad, thinly sliced ham and Vienna bread or pumpernickel.

The GENTLER SEX

By Malvina Lindsay.

The Right to Rouge.

THERE is one front on which Hitler seems to have been stopped. It is that of feminine beauty. The Nazis, according to The New York Times, have recanted in their campaign against cosmetics and fashionable dress, and a new cult of beauty and elegance is being encouraged in Germany.

* * * *

"The more beautiful German girls become, the more proud and self-respecting they will be," says Baldur von Schirach, Reich youth leader.

* * * *

Among the reasons given for this change of front is the desire of new National Socialist leaders to surround themselves on state occasions with personal splendor—including women of whose appearance they may be proud. So apparently American business men are not alone in their desire to advertise their own success through their wives' mink coats and diamonds.

* * * *

Another reason for the Nazi's change is said to be the revolt of young women following their discovery that even National Socialist men still preferred the dainty, glamorous girls to the stalwart, shiny nosed ones.

* * * *

We suspect the last reason is the more cogent. One by one the dictators have been finding out what has been demonstrated repeatedly through the ages—that condemnation, ukase, force, even ridicule will never deter women from the practise of the arts that are bound up with sex appeal. Stalin found the same situation in Russia, Mussolini in Italy. Many men before them—rulers, reformers, husbands—had met up with the same stone wall of feminine obduracy.

* * * *

Democracy may be bluffed, science crushed, culture annihilated by tyrants but feminine "fixing up" will always survive. We salute the womanhood of the past and of the present for its tenacious courage in clinging to this inalienable personal right. So long as this attitude survives, the torch of individual liberty will be kept burning.

Fun With the Broom.

HOUSEWORK should be a joy to women rather than a chore, believes Dr. Karl A. Menninger, psychiatrist and author of a new book, "Man Against Himself." "It is the martyr complex in women," said Dr. Menninger in a recent interview, "that causes her to make drudgery out of chores that could be a joy and makes her refuse to use labor saving devices."

* * * *

One trouble with the world, according to Dr. Menninger, is that people will not admit having fun at their toil. He believes this may be a hangover from the Puritanic idea that pleasure is a sin.

* * * *

So ladies, the thing to do now apparently is not only to chirp and sing while washing the dishes, scraping the pans, oiling the floors, and cleaning the bathtub, but to come out of your martyrdom and order some new vacuum cleaners, electric refrigerators, dishwashers, egg beaters, cake mixers, toasters, fireless cookers, et cetera (of course sending the bills to your husbands) so you may have a lot of good wholesome fun about the house.

Paging St. Joan.

ANOTHER complaint that women of today "lack the great leaders of yesterday" has been voiced by Mme. Belle de Rivera, founder and honorary president of the New York City Federation of Women's Clubs. At a recent celebration of her ninetieth birthday Mme. de Rivera lamented that there were no such leaders today as Susan B. Anthony, Elizabeth Cady Stanton and Frances E. Willard. She said it was because women of today were not united in one common purpose, and suggested that through a common drive for world peace they could make their influence felt.

* * * *

Only time can determine how great are the women leaders of today. Probably in the days of the big suffrage and temperance drives women often wished for a Joan of Arc to arise from the past. And these movements had their splits and their factions, their cliques and their politicians.

* * * *

The charge is frequently made that women won't work together. In fact this seems to be a failing of the human race that cannot be surmounted no matter how magnificent the cause. For instance, what wars, great and small, have been waged in the name of the brotherhood of man?

Troyanovskys Present Two Soviet Musicians

Scores of Notables Are Embassy Guests to Hear Prokofieff, Pianist and Composer, and Mme. Llubera, Lyric Soprano.

By Hope Ridings Miller,
The Post Society Editor.

Two visiting artists, in a program presented before 300 Washingtonians last night, proved that the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics can hold its own against any country in the field of music.

The occasion was a musicale given by the Soviet Ambassador and Mme. Alexander Troyanovsky, an event that drew scores of notables—including several chiefs of diplomatic missions, Government officials, members of Congress and their wives and a scattering of residential Washingtonians. Soloists were Sergei Prokofieff, noted Soviet composer and pianist, and Mme. Lina Llubera, Soviet lyric soprano.

With its scarlet-carpeted marble stairway and spacious rooms, the Soviet Embassy is always a glamorous setting for entertaining. Last evening it was especially so, when huge vases of spring flowers decorated the reception hall and ballroom, and three tall silver holders bearing pink carnations were in a row on the long table in the dining room where a lavish supper was served at midnight.

HOPE R. MILLER.

Since the Troyanovskys first became a part of the Capital's social life, they have established something of a record in party-giving on the grand scale, and in drawing—along with some of the more glittering social lights—many interesting guests who have something besides money and position to recommend them. A glimpse here, there and anywhere at the Soviet Embassy last evening revealed several persons any embassy might do well to have often within its walls.

The host and hostess greeted their guests in the reception hall, Mme. Troyanovsky, gowned in white, directed callers on to the ballroom where the musicale took place. There, in row on row of gilt chairs, the throng was seated to hear Mr. Prokofieff play a number of his compositions on a program that also included Mme. Llubera's songs, native to the different provinces of the Soviet Union.

Program Is Well Received

The "Shepherd's Song of Georgia," done to a fine turn by Mme. Llubera, and the "Dance of the Ballet," opus 76, from Mr. Prokofieff's four-act ballet, "Romeo and Juliet," were especially well received, as were other of the pianist's compositions.

Following the program, as guests mingle . . . found their way to the dining room, where supper climaxed the evening's entertainment, and to the gallery where drinks were served . . . several of us crowded around the artists to find out more about them. With the aid of the personal Counselor of the Embassy, Constantine Oumansky, I discovered that Mr. Prokofieff and Mme. Llubera (his wife) have two children—"one 9, the other 14"—she proudly told me, and that they have made a number of concert tours in this country since he first came to America in 1918 for the production of one of his operas, "The Love of the Three Oranges."

Since then, also, he has written four symphonies, four operas, five ballets and seven concertos, in addition to a number of other works. In Moscow more recently he has been composing for the films. Not long ago, however, he was commissioned by the Soviet government to write special music for the recent Pushkin celebration. One of his latest works is the ballet, "Romeo and Juliet."

Among the guests last evening were many notables, as well as a sprinkling of press representatives who usually are in evidence at Soviet functions. The Spanish Ambassador and Senora de los Rios were there; also, the Chinese Ambassador, Dr. C. T. Wang, who was accompanied by two of his daughters, Miss Yoeh Wang and Miss An-fu Wang.

Mme. Zimbalist Among the Guests

The new French Ambassador, Count de Saint-Quentin, was also on hand, making one of his first appearances at a large event. Other especially popular guests in the "bachelor class" were the Polish Ambassador, Count Jerzy Potocki; Senator Theodore F. Green, and Senator Arthur Capper. Miss Pauletta Guffey, in a dress of nude satin trimmed in gold sequins, was there, accompanied by her sister, Mrs. Carroll Miller, gowned in white crepe set off with fringe. Mme. Efrem Zimbalist was another distinguished guest.

Guest From Georgia

Harris & Ewing.

MISS JACQUELINE HOWARD,
of Atlanta, Ga., who is now the house guest of Representative Robert Ramspeck and Mrs. Ramspeck, was the guest of honor at a luncheon given yesterday by Mrs. Hugh Peterson, wife of Representative Peterson, of Georgia. Miss Howard's father, William Howard, was formerly a member of Congress. She arrived last Thursday for a visit of ten days.

About The Town

With Dudley Harmon

THE OTHER DAY the German Ambassador, Hans Dieckhoff, was showing a friend the new car he had purchased for his wife. "Look at this big rumble seat," he remarked laughingly, "it's almost large enough to put Czechoslovakia in." Which proves that there is no reason to feel tense in discussing the "situation" with the Germans.

DUDLEY HARMON.

As a matter of fact, when Italy was conducting its campaign to "civilize" Ethiopia, one didn't have to try tactfully to avoid the subject in talking with members of the Italian Embassy staff. They used to approach one and say "Do you mind if I talk to you about Ethiopia?"

At a cocktail party the other day somebody asked "Why is a great big strong man like Hitler so sensitive about what the newspapers say about him in far-off America?" This person suggested that the greatest punishment that could be meted out to "Der Fruhrer" would be to bring him to Washington and have him watch a Gridiron Show taking him off the way the President is ribbed. "Hitler evidently would much rather be shot than have to to sit through such a performance," said our friend.

* * * *

WITH ALL THIS WAR-TALK pervading even the frivolous atmosphere of cocktail parties, it is most fitting that the Spanish Embassy should be holding an exhibition of recent photographs taken in its embattled country. So interesting and unusual are these pictures that we advise you to drop in there between social rounds sometime between now and late Friday afternoon when the exhibit closes.

One somehow expects the atmosphere of the Spanish Embassy to be noticeably sad these days. But yesterday afternoon there were bowls of fresh spring flowers everywhere—tulips, calla lilies and iris. The butler who smilingly welcomed visitors to the exhibit looked as though he had not a care in the world.

* * * *

The pictures are the work of Robert Capa and Gerda Taro, and thereby, as the saying goes, hangs a tale. The former is a Hungarian who spent the early part of his life in Budapest, and Gerda Taro was a German girl from a wealthy Stuttgart family, who learned to speak English from reading Dos Passos' book, "1919."

The two met somewhere in Europe, walked together from Prague to Berlin, and from there went on to Paris, arriving with 2 francs between them. From then on they lived by their cameras.

* * * *

THEY went to Spain, attracted by the chance to make a historic record of the ghastly struggle. Although only 25, Gerda accompanied Capa into action on the front, and many of the pictures being shown at the embassy were taken by her. Returning to Madrid, they ran into a rebel counter-attack, and a 10-ton tank killed Capa's young partner. His recently published book of photographs, entitled "Death in the Making," bears this beautiful dedication: "For Gerda Taro, who spent one year at the Spanish front and who stayed on."

The 200 pictures now on view at the embassy are not wholly a record of carnage and suffering. Some of them show Spain as it once was, with peasants gathering in the wheat or dancing in cafes. Capa has caught the whole aspect of the country.

It is interesting to note the contrasts as shown in this photographic record. A series entitled "The New Army," taken in 1936, shows close-ups of laughing, happy soldiers, many of them looking not more than 18 years old at the most. It is evident that they do not yet know what war is. But as the pictures progress, there are few laughing faces. One striking photograph was snapped as a man was shot, and shows his face assuming the grimace of death and his musket falling from his hand.

* * * *

Wisconsin U. President Tells Alumni of Growth

By Jessie Ash Arndt,
The Post Club Editor.

Dr. Clarence A. Dykstra, styling himself "freshman president of the University of Wisconsin, yesterday addressed members of the Wisconsin Alumni Association at a luncheon in his honor at the National Press Club. George Worthington, head of the association, presided and the 200 guests included many of the institution's most distinguished alumni.

Prefacing his remarks with the comment that he would relieve his feelings on educational processes at his evening lecture in Constitution Hall, Dr. Dykstra confined his discussion to the university and its student body. The enrollment has grown from 200 to 11,000 in 40 years, he said and described the university as a place where the old American spirit, which was the pioneering spirit of the West, still persisted, although it had passed in many other places in the country.

Crowded Conditions Present Problem

"Students are fairly bulging out of the buildings, their coat tails hanging out of the windows," said President Dykstra. "Classrooms calculated to accommodate 60 students are serving 150. The crowded condition brings with it the problem of providing added facilities, which require time, means and energy, or of deciding on some selective process by which only a chosen few shall be given the advantages offered by the university."

He declared he wanted it to be an institution "where the faculty and students are free to speak their minds and to face any problem which may arise for solution."

"Education," he asserted, "is no longer a star beckoning to individual success. It represents the responsibility of the individual not only to find success for himself but for the larger group as well."

"There's no question about the university being coeducational," remarked Mrs. William Leiserson to Dr. Leiserson, chairman of the National Mediation Board, as she looked over the room, with almost an equal number of men and women at the tables. Seated with Dr. and Mrs. Leiserson was Miss Rose Swart, who holds an honorary degree from the university and was for 50 years head of the Teachers' Training course at the Oshkosh Normal School. Others were Mrs. Katherine Swart, Dr. D. O. Kinsman, professor of economics at American University and former president of the alumni Association, and Mrs. Kinsman.

Veteran Educator Among the Guests

Among other distinguished alumni seated through the room were Dr. Stanley K. Hornbeck, of the State Department, former professor of political science at the university; Merrill Murray, associate director of the unemployment insurance division of the Social Security Board; Forrest Black, former professor and now in the Department of Justice; Raymond Hellman, of the Department of Justice, and Washington Cleveland, director of the District of Columbia Motor Club.

Among others present were Miss Ruby Black, of the United Press, one of Washington's well-known newspaper women, who was an instructor in journalism at the university from 1921 to 1923; Miss Emma Lundberg, Patrick Cooney, president of the Wisconsin State Society, and Miss Mabel Randolph, for many years secretary of the department of political science and economics at the university.

Women's Group Hears Senator On Farm Income

Mr. McGill Addresses Democratic Council at Meeting Here.

A boost in the Nation's farm income will result from the farm legislation enacted by this Congress, Senator George McGill, of Kansas, told members of the Democratic Women's National Council, speaking last night at their monthly meeting in the National Democratic Club.

Crop adjustment, designed to conform to the demands of the consumer is the solution, he believes to the problem of income for the producer, and this in turn will have its effect on the whole economic condition of the country.

Industrial sections have a tendency to overlook the fact, said Senator McGill, that the gross income of agriculture has been shown, over a period of 50 years, to be the gaguage of the gross wage payroll of manufacturing concerns throughout the country. The industrial sections do not at once feel the slump or rise of farm prices, but within the year, they show a rise or fall in the same proportion, he said.

Senator McGill, who was one of the conferees on the 1938 legislation, declared that crop adjustment was not based on the philosophy of scarcity but provided for all domestic and foreign consumption and the storing away of sufficient to care for any special need. The plan, he explained, would prevent the marketing a large surplus and thus driving down the producer's income, he said.

* * * *

He explained the various provisions of the law, including that calling for a referendum in which two-thirds of the growers of a specified crop must vote in favor of the marketing quotas before they can be made effective.

He told the Democratic women the new legislation was something the farmers have long been wanting and that a large majority of them favored it.

More than 200 women attended last night's meeting at which the president, Mrs. Harry A. Dodderidge, presided. Next Monday night the council will conduct a forum, which is being arranged by Mrs. Marion L. Ramsay.

Harry R. Daniel, of the Commerce Department, guest speaker at the weekly forum luncheon of the Woman's National Democratic Club, outlined the romance of the great American industries. The iron and steel industry had its origin among the stars, the wasp taught man how to make paper out of wood, and there is no such thing as a moving picture, he told the gathering.

"So-called moving pictures consist of a series of still pictures which come on the screen at the rate of 1,440 per minute. Each of these pictures comes to an absolute stop, and that is when the eye catches it," he told his audience.

Mr. Daniel, who was introduced by Mrs. Rene Jones Taylor, expressed pleasure at speaking to a visible audience, a change from his year and a half of addressing invisible audiences in presenting the Commerce Department's radio programs on the subject on which he spoke yesterday.

His research in preparation of the problems, has caused him to be amazed at the development of these vast American industries. "No other nation even remotely approaches ours in this respect," he said, and declared that "whatever America makes, from automobiles to chicken soups, the whole world takes."

We have a thriving chinchilla industry despite the fact that the natural habitat of the chinchilla is an altitude of 15,000 feet in the Andes mountains. "Some years ago a California mining engineer decided to bring chinchillas to this country. He selected a number of specimens and brought them down to an elevation of 11,000 feet for two years, and then down to 9,000 for another year, then over a period of six years down the remaining distance to sea level," he explained. Today that engineer boasts a thriving chinchilla farm.

Outlining the history of perfumes, an industry "old as civilization and as bizarre as the wildest sweep of imagination," Mr. Daniel said that before the days of modern chemistry there were only 200 available odors for perfume, now there are at least 1,000.

At the head table with the speaker in addition to Mrs. Taylor were Mrs. R. M. Hodgson, Mrs. Harold Baynton, Miss Mary Pyle, Mrs. Frank Warren, Mrs. Wilbur W. Hubbard, and Mrs. Lucille Hazeman.

Mrs. Doyle and Miss Strayer Speak at Women's City Club

Dr. Mitchell Dreese Also Discusses Administration of Recreational Facilities in Washington at Monday Forum.

The school situation and administration of recreational facilities in Washington were discussed last night at the Monday forum of the Women's City Club by Mrs. Henry Grattan Doyle, chairman of the board of education, and Miss Martha Strayer, newspaperwoman, and Dr. Mitchell Dreese, of George Washington University.

Mrs. Doyle's discussion dealt chiefly with the school system and school administration in the District. She traced the program from kindergarten through teachers' college, and pointed out the desirability of several services which the District does not have. Among them was that of home teachers for children out of school because of illness. Three times an appropriation requested for this has been eliminated from the budget, she said. She also urged more emphasis on guidance in the schools and the need for more personnel for this function. It would mean direction of the child in the courses best designed to meet his future need, she said. She also advocated periodic medical examinations for all children.

Mrs. Doyle pointed out that six school buildings, condemned in 1908 as insanitary and unsafe, were still being used in the District, although one, the Jefferson Memorial School, is soon to be replaced.

They also stressed the value of extending vocational education in the schools, not only for the day students but for adults who enroll in the evening schools.

Mrs. William Partridge presided at the forum, which drew an interested audience of club members and guests.

Dr. Dreese discussed the proposed legislation providing for a Board of Recreation for the District. He said he considered such action premature and suggested a year in which the Board of Education could voluntarily work out a satisfactory plan through its recreation board, rather than making it mandatory under the proposed board.

Discussing the report of the President's committee on reorganization of the school system, he advocated the recommendation made for the District of Columbia that more authority be given the Board of Education. Instead of the present plan, under which each appropriation must be approved, he urged a lump appropriation be administered by the board which would be held responsible for wise expenditure of the funds.

"This would make the board a functioning organization instead of a paper one," he asserted.

Miss Strayer favored co-ordination of the playground administration, stressing the need of using all available facilities to keep children off the streets and give them supervision after school hours. The problem of providing the youth of the city is one of reduction in delinquency and crime, she pointed out, and one which, if not solved now, comes back on the community later.

Fletcher Says Illiteracy Perils U. S. Democracy

The Parent-Teacher Association of Central High School last night heard amazing figures on "the parade of illiteracy across our Nation" from Representative Brooks Fletcher, of Ohio, who addressed its March meeting. "The Tragedy of Our Uneducated Millions" was the subject of his talk.

More than 2,000,000 young people of school age are not in classrooms because there are not facilities to accommodate them, he told his audience, and an almost equal number is in school only a few days a year

Pointing out that there are more than 4,000,000 adults who can neither read nor write, he termed such illiteracy a menace to our democracy. "It is hard for democracy to rise above what its people think and hard for people to think above what they know. There's where revolutions start. The ignorant who have not sufficient education to arrive at mature judgment when they vote are prey for agitators," he said.

Representative Fletcher is co-author of the Harrison-Fletcher bill providing Federal co-operation with the States in building adequate school facilities. Many States with great natural resources do not receive the tax revenue from them, he explained, because their wealth is produced by corporations incorporated and taxed in other States. The rural districts, in such cases, suffer.

There are 35,000 teachers in this country who receive but $400 a year and 200,000 who receive not more than $800 a year, he declared, citing that statistics show also that, in cities 20 per cent fewer children are born than are necessary to maintain the population at its present level while, in rural districts, 50 per cent more are born than are necessary to maintain the population. This leaves country children with less and less adequate educational facilities while those in cities are amply provided for.

Besides those who actually receive no education, there are those coming out of high schools and colleges with educations which do not fit them to take their place in modern life, he said, and these might almost be classed with the uneducated.

A feature of last night's program in addition to Representative Fletcher's address was a group of vocal solos by Mrs. Fletcher, accompanied by Miss Willa Semple. The Representative and his wife have given more than 1,000 programs together.

Madame Chairman

By Suzanne.

MEMBERS of the Women's Party are jubilant today over the impetus given the proposed equal rights amendment when it was reported to the Senate yesterday by the Judiciary Committee.

The action was epochal, as it was the first time in history the proposed amendment had ever been reported to a house of Congress. Efforts of opponents of the measure to have it reported unfavorably failed and the final vote ended in a 9-to-9 tie. As a result, it was decided to report it to the Senate for action. Senator Edward R. Burke is one of the leading advocates of the amendment.

THE BOARD of the D. C. Voteless League of Women Voters, at its March meeting Saturday passed two important resolutions. The one indorsed the principles of the Lewis-Randolph bill; urged a change in the item on the National League program from "national representation" to "suffrage for the District" and pledged continued support of the provisions of the Capper-Norton bill.

The second resolution deplored the action of the appropriations commitee of the House and Senate, withholding funds from the National Training School for Girls for next year. The board characterized the action as a backward step in the care of delinquent girls.

DELEGATES to the national League of Women Voters convention in St. Louis next month will be Mrs. Charles Weston and Mrs. R. Gordon Waganet, in addition to the president, Mrs. Louis Ottenberg. The board named Mrs. A. J. McKelway, Mrs. C. E. Hodge and Mrs. Pearl B. Klein as alternates.

GIRLS of the Cooking Section of the Chevy Chase Junior Woman's Club last night drove out to the farm home of Harriet and Betty Marsden, near Brookville and cooked their own dinner. Eleanor Fitts, chairman of the section, was among them and Hilda Conkling, who spoke before the literature section last week, went along as guest of honor.

The junior club seems almost busier than the senior group. Tonight the 10 or 12 members of the Sports Section will try bowling at the Bethesda Bowling Alley. Margaret Griesbauer is chairman of the section, which is experimenting with various forms of recreation—bowling, roller skating, horseback riding and so forth—to discover the one the members like the best.

Thursday night Margaret Abbe will be hostess to the dramatic section at her home, 3737 Huntington avenue. Mrs. Charles Pentz is chairman and the girls are preparing to present "Kid Gloves," a one-act comedy on club life, before the Maryland State Federation of Women's Clubs at its junior night program in Baltimore, April 11.

Takoma Park Club Gardeners Hold Flowery First Meeting

Mrs. William Burk, Mrs. Himmelwright and Mrs. Richmond Give Talks on Various Spring Plants Before 43 Members.

The Takoma Park Woman's Club ushered in spring with the first meeting of its garden department, held at the home of Mrs. Arthur Harrison, 212 Willow avenue, yesterday.

Each member brought spring flowers from her garden for display. There were sprays of Japanese quince, large bowls of crocuses arranged in moss as though growing, narcissus of several varieties, forsythia and pussy willows. The profusion of flowers and shrubs was used for decoration throughout the house.

The program included a talk by Mrs. William Burk on African violets; a discussion by Mrs. M. T. Himmelwright on care and culture of amaryllis, and a forecast on new plants for 1938 by Mrs. I. H. Richmond. One of the new varieties she mentioned was the heavenly blue morning glory, which blooms all day instead of just in the morning.

About 43 department members were present. The luncheon menu of green salad, with deviled eggs, rolls and jam, applesauce cake and whipped cream, also carried out of the suggestion of spring.

The department, which has been active almost since the beginning of the club 25 years ago, will meet each month during the spring and summer. It closes in October, when other departments are getting under way for winter. The membership is increasing steadily and is expected to reach 50 before summer is well started.

A tour of members' gardens and of famous gardens in the vicinity will be included in the program for the year and several members also plan to attend the Philadelphia Flower Show which opened yesterday, among them Mrs. J. N. Quinn, chairman of the department.

The members display their flowers at meetings during the season, exchange of bulbs and plants and compete in flower arrangement. The next meeting, the third Monday in April, will be held at the home of Mrs. George E. Davis.

Assisting hostesses yesterday were Mrs. A. D. Stedman, Mrs. F. A. Shumaker, Mrs. G. Gilbert Sward, Mrs. Louis O. Regembal and Mrs. Eugene J. Hurdle.

Rep. E. H. Rees Is Speaker at A. A. U. W. Tea

Kansan Pleads for Increased Interest of Women in Government.

Highlights of the present session of Congress were presented to the Washington Branch of the American Association of University Women by Representative Edward H. Rees, of Kansas, yesterday afternoon at its regular Monday tea.

He also made the plea for an active interest in Government affairs by women of the Nation. "Democracy is under the severest test it has ever faced, he said—it is on trial and it is up to us to prove that it will work."

He gave a bird's-eye view of legislation which has been under consideration during the present session and commented specifically on several issues.

Regarding the proposed reorganization of Government, he expressed the opinion that it was not for the best interests of our Government to put more power into the hands of the Chief Executive—whether this one or any who follow him. "Because of the complexity of our modern economic structure, the Federal Government has taken authority formerly invested in the States. It behooves us to guard against the tendency to put too much power into the hands of one individual or a small group."

He granted that, in many departments, there might be reorganization to increase efficient administration, but said he did not believe the reorganization bill was the answer to the problem.

Another tendency to be avoided, he said, was sectional legislation. It is necessary that the needs of the whole country be taken into consideration, he pointed out. Many measures which come before Congress, he added, are obviously in the interest of better government, which members of both parties desire, that the bills receive general support.

The American public constantly clamors for more Government services, he said, and while it makes demands, it should also realize that these must be paid for and that taxation provides the revenue to foot the bill.

Washington, March 22.

Outwardly, official Washington is maintaining a correctly inscrutable attitude toward the seizure of Austria . . . Angry opinions are off the record; only the more buttery comments get into print.

His Arguments Halt Bridge Leap

JAMES D. CUNNINGHAM.

James D. Cunningham, attorney for the Federal Communications Commission, put his training in forensics to good use last night when he argued an elderly jobless stonecutter out of jumping from the Calvert street bridge.

Cunningham told police he was driving across the bridge with Mrs. Cunningham when he saw someone standing outside the bridge railing. He had her turn the car about and drive to the spot. There he found Albert F. Krichton, 58, of 715 H street northwest, standing on the ledge beyond the rail.

He gave Krichton a cigarette and engaged him in conversation until he was able to send a passerby to call police. Sergt. George Peery of the Eighth Precinct responded to a radio call and took Krichton into custody. He was sent to Gallinger Hospital for mental observation.

Police said the elderly man told them he had long been out of work, was without funds and friendless.

Study Centers To Aid Jobless Youth Urged

Security Board Aide Pleads for 'Realistic' School Curricula.

Activity centers, to give manual and cultural training to jobless young people between 16 and 25, were advocated last night by Miss Louise K. McGuire, of the Social Security Board, in a lecture given for the benefit of Carroll House, under sponsorship of the Boys Guidance Association of Washington.

Pleading for "more realistic school curricula, related to practical living," Miss McGuire told her audience at the Willard that "many youngsters do not like school, and as soon as they have completed the compulsory requirements they leave, but cannot find work."

Activity centers, Miss McGuire held, would fill the need of this class of students by instructing them along lines in which they are interested, such as hand work, music and painting. In the earlier years as well, children should be given something more than the mere ability "to go from grade to grade," she said.

Miss McGuire, who is regional representative of the Bureau of Public Assistance under the S. S. B., maintained that competition in school "causes many of the maladjustments of youngsters, including truancy and other 'escapes.' These situations become "crucial," she said, "because nowhere along the line do children learn the rules of competition. Thus, competition warps imagination, shrinks generosity and enlarges selfishness in the strong and causes frustration, inferiority and bitterness in the weak."

Declaring that it is "preposterous" to expect the same grade of work from children who are well situated economically as from those "whose privacy consists of one-quarter of a bed in the kitchen," Miss McGuire indicated school curricula should be adjusted in recognition of such inequalities.

William Carrigan, director of Carroll House, was chairman of the meeting.

'Misused Idealism' Held Causing Rise Of World Fascism

"Misused idealism" was blamed for present chaotic world conditions by Dr. Lynn C. Hough, of Drew University, speaking last night before the Washington Ministerial Union at Corcoran Hall, Georgetown University. This "misused idealism," he said, has sanctioned the Spanish war, the rise of Nazi-ism in Germany, the conquest of Ethiopia and Germany's annexation of Austria.

"We have sacrificed our validity of Christianity," he said, "for the complacency of a superficial fellowship, and have developed into sort of a "glorified Rotary Club" in our international relationships."

Dr. Cloyd Heck Marvin, president of George Washington, said "the principles that will save the world are to be found in militant values." Dr. Oscar Blackwelder, pastor of the Lutheran Church of the Reformation, presided.

U. S. Library As Jefferson Shrine Asked

Conference of Civic Interfederation Would End Controversy.

President Roosevelt was asked by the Interfederation Conference of civic associations in suburban Washington last night to settle the long standing controversy over a memorial to Thomas Jefferson by dedicating the Library of Congress to the memory of the third President.

A resolution unanimously adopted by the conference meeting in the United States Chamber of Commerce asked that the library be made the memorial. Copies of the resolution were directed to President Roosevelt as well as to the Thomas Jefferson Memorial Commission and to Congress.

The conference also named a committee headed by Washington I. Cleveland to draft a set of recommendations covering existing controversies over Washington parking and issuance of tags for District cars. The committee was directed to consider abolition of all-night parking and parking downtown and the creation of municipal parking lots. It also is to study advisability of changing the date of District license tag issuance.

Named to the committee to work with Cleveland were F. N. Gast, of the Prince Georges County Civic Federation; J. B. Brooks, of the Arlington Civic Federation, and L. A. Carruthers, president of the Washington Federation of Citizens Associations.

In another resolution, the conference voted unanimously to "reiterate" its opposition to installation of parking meters in the city. H. S. Yohe, president of the Montgomery County Civic Federation, was chairman of the meeting.

Car Line Defended

The Lincoln Park Citizens Association, meeting at the Bryan School, last night adopted a resolution opposing discontinuance of the Eighth and F street car as proposed by the Capital Traction Co. The resolution was introduced by the public utilities committee.

Senator Thomas (Democrat), Okla-

Another resolution commended homa, for his efforts to have six-physicians added to the Gallinger Hospital staff and urged that any new physicians employed should be bona fide residents of the District who "are already giving their time and talents" to needy patients. The Attorney General was commended in a resolution for supporting David A. Pine, a native of Washington, for District attorney.

Indorsement was voted the proposal to change the licensing date for automobiles from January to April. The sum of $10 was appropriated to the Police Boys Club in a resolution commending Maj. Ernest W. Brown, superintendent of police, for his sponsorship of the organization.

Race Track Opposed

Established of a race-track in the District and "pari-mutuel or any other form of gambling that goes with it" was opposed in a resolution unanimously adopted last night by the Brookland Citizens Association, meeting at Masonic Hall, Twelfth and Monroe streets northeast.

The association also urged "more stringent laws to stop the numbers racket." Both resolutions were proposed by George R. Ellis. On motion of Marvin McLean, president of the association, the group advocated a traffic light at Twelfth and Monroe streets.

A retail liquor license in the 3500 block of Twelfth street northeast was opposed, on the grounds that the address is less than 400 feet from St. Anthony's Church, and is also near the parochial school and Brookland School.

Sixteenth Street Heights

James R. Kirkland, lieutenant in the U. S. Naval Reserve, last night described his experiences in Spain at the outbreak of the revolution, in a meeting of the Sixteenth Street Heights Citizens Association at Shepherd School. New members admitted to the group last night were Mallet Prevost, Mrs. G. W. Schofield and Mrs. Evelyn Buckley.

Policeman's Wife Bears a Child as He Lies Wounded

While Policeman Edmund F. Fitzgerald, 1241 Baum street northeast, was recovering in Casualty Hospital from knife wounds received in a fight with a colored man Saturday, his wife gave birth to a 9-pound son in Providence Hospital yesterday.

Fitzgerald's son was born shortly after midnight and mother and baby were reported "doing nicely."

Meanwhile, John Butler, colored, 23, 700 block Lamont street northwest, shot four times by Fitzgerald, remained in critical condition. Doctors said he had an even chance to recover from wounds in the lung and hips.

Health Trouble Of D.C. Laid to Rapid Growth

Dr. Robret Olesenn Urges Advisory Council, New Sanitary Code.

Rapid growth of Washington's population accounts for many problems covered in the recent survey of District health facilities, according to Dr. Robert Olesen, assistant surgeon general of the United States, who conducted the survey.

That Washington is a large city often is forgotten, he told the health committee of the Council of Social Agencies at a luncheon meeting at the Y. W. C. A. yesterday. He pointed to such "small town stuff" as the frequent sight of an Emergency Hospital ambulance "careening down Pennsylvania avenue through red lights on the wrong side of the street."

Listing highlights of his report, made public early this month, Dr. Olesen emphasized the need for a reorganized health department to co-ordinate local facilities. He suggested calling it the "department of health and hospitals" and renaming the health officer "director of health," changes he feels would add dignity to the department.

Dr. Olesen also recommended a separate building for the department, provision for 500 more beds at Gallinger Hospital, revision of laws for commitment of the mentally ill and establishment of three health centers similar to those now operating in New York City.

His "pet and favorite recommendation," he said, is a public health advisory council of seven persons, not more than three to be physicians and at least two to be women. He also would like to see a revision of the present sanitary code, which contains "history but nothing else."

"The lack of franchise always will be a handicap," he commented.

Dr. Olesen expressed hope money for printing results of the survey may be forthcoming from some source.

Rep. Celler Offers Bill to Let Capital Elect Own Mayor

Local suffrage and a mayoralty form of government for the District were proposed yesterday in a bill introduced in the House by Representative Celler (Democrat), of New York.

The measure also would set up an elective city council of 25 members. Every person over 21 years of age who has resided in the District 90 days or more before election would be qualified to vote regardless of whether or not he maintains legal residence in one of the States.

The mayor's salary would be $10,000 a year, but the salaries of the councilmen is not specified in the bill. Nominations would be by petition.

Election days are specified as the first Tuesday of March in every second year, as the terms of both the mayor and councilmen would be two years. A board of supervisors appointed by the President would supervise.

Need for Fitness in Life Today Cited by Public Health Expert

Competitive Economy Is Driving Force for Personal Efficiency, Dr. Ziegler Says in Lecture Series at Central High.

Modern living conditions have intensified the problem of community health and should be met by community health programs, Dr. Mark V. Ziegler, senior surgeon, United States Public Health Service, said last night in a lecture at Central High School.

His lecture, "Public Health" was the third of a series on community relationships sponsored by the public night schools, the Public Library, the colleges and universities and the newspapers of Washington.

Three factors which enter into the magnified modern health problem, he said, are:

Industrial activities and mass production, which bring together in factories workers who formerly were employed in their homes, and community gatherings which are a part of the modern industrial picture.

Development of modern communication, breaking down former isolation of communities, quickening the spread of disease and increasing the difficulties of preventing and controlling epidemics.

Today's competitive economy has demanded increased personal efficiency and makes physical fitness the driving force which brings in public health as a consideration in business.

"The number of persons sick or disabled in a community," he said, "and with the frequency which deaths occur, determine in the final analysis the healthfulness of the community."

The importance of community health in the scheme of government, he said, "is demonstrated by the authority given by legislative bodies to health departments and the liberal powers conferred upon boards of health in exercising control over the lives and properties of the people."

The basis of a satisfactory public health program in any community, Dr. Ziegler said, is a well-organized health department, adequately financed and staffed with trained personnel and supported by the local medical profession, suitable laws and ordinances and favorable public opinion. He described the organization and functions of a typical health service.

Lectures to follow in the series will cover recreation and education.

Franklin's Tolerance Lauded At Masonic Lodge's Banquet

Tribute to Benjamin Franklin's principles of tolerance, still honored in America but trampled in many European nations, featured speeches heard last night by 500 members and guests of Benjamin Franklin Lodge, No. 50, F. A. A. M., at a banquet held in the Mayflower Hotel.

Pointing to "countries disturbed by war and rebellion and people living in fear of their very existence, deprived of all their rights and liberties," Dr. A. Harry Ostrow, worshipful master, exclaimed, "How fortunate are we that we dwell under the Stars and Stripes, ever protected by the greatest democracy on earth."

Such leaders as Washington and Franklin "laid the foundation for Freemasonry in this democracy, and inspired by the teachings of Masonry, constructed upon it a democracy proclaiming brotherly love, justice and liberty," he said.

Representative Sol Bloom (Democrat), of New York, characterized Franklin as "truly cosmopolitan and world-minded, the first American to command the respect of Europe."

Other speakers included Paul B. Cromelin, grand master of Masons in the District, at the time the Benjamin Franklin Lodge was chartered in February, 1937; J. Claude Keiper, grand secretary, Grand Lodge of the District, and Milton I. Mervis, chairman of arrangements for the banquet.

Bethesda Mechanic Hurt As Garage Floor Burns

A Bethesda, Md., auto mechanic was seriously burned last night when the kerosene-soaked floor of the Covington Motor Co. garage caught fire from a match thrown away carelessly.

The mechanic, S. Peters, tripped and fell as he fled the flames. By the time other employes rescued him, he had been badly burned about the hands and face. He was taken to Georgetown Hospital.

U. S. Employes Declared Under 'Feudal' System

Monday Evening Club's Speaker Urges Civil Service for All.

Declaring that "Government employes today are not unlike the retainers of the feudal lords of the Middle Ages," Karl deSchweinitz, director of the Pennsylvania School of Social Work, last night asserted "there can be no adequate solution of Government operation so long as its workers feel their prime responsibility is to the men who got them the jobs."

Addressing more than 200 members of the Monday Evening Club at their annual dinner in the Young Women's Christian Association Building, deSchweinitz recommended the use of a merit system for all Government employes.

"Only when these employes are removed from political wars can we hope for sound administration of the public's business," he declared.

Highly praising the civil service system, deSchweinitz said, "If we can succeed in including a merit system for all employes in the Government, we shall have made a great step forward in extending the intent of the civil service act.

Following the address, members of the club voted to instruct the executive committee to request an investigation of the District relief situation. Organizations recommended to conduct the study were the Brookings Institute, the Social Security Board and the American Public Welfare Association.

D. C. Truck Driver Declared Suicide

A certificate of suicide was issued last night in the death of Moke Weber, 51, truck driver, who was found shot through the head yesterday in a second-floor room of his home, 1132 Eighth street northwest.

Drive to Unify U. S. Is Urged By Educator

Dykstra, Wisconsin University Head, Sees Need of New Goal.

Dr. C. A. Dykstra, president of the University of Wisconsin, declared at the final Bronson Cutting memorial lecture last night that we may soon have to mass all our "educational facilities" in an attempt to "fire our people once more with a sense of unity, a common cause, a clear objective and a love of the traditional America."

Warning that "we face within our own borders and particularly through the device of the radio the missionary endeavors of the Fascist world," Dr. Dykstra told a near-capacity audience at Constitution Hall that the marshaling of our schools, the press, the radio and the motion pictures might "give the American people a realistic picture of the world in which we live and an understanding of the problems facing our civilization and our democracy."

The speaker said that American education cannot help recognize "how widespread is the teaching throughout the world which by precept and implication throws overboard the whole theory of democracy" and that the "values which we have taught in America for generations no longer produce a proper understanding of the world as we find it."

Dictators Cited.

"The dictators are not making this mistake," he pointed out. "They are cultivating a common interest and a new goal. They are teaching the doctrine that to save one's life one must lose it in devotion to a common social ideal."

He asserted that only a conscious educational program, utilizing all media, could lastingly change the indifference of Americans to their traditions and their responsibilites as heirs to those traditions.

"The challenge America faces today in a world of warring philosophies," he said, "is whether we can make the democratic idea and process work in such a way that we can achieve security in a social organization which will maintain freedom."

Isms Meets Cims.

Dr. Dykstra led up to his final argument by tracing the origin of American democracy and the development of fascism and communism. Defining democracy as "an aspiration centering around the belief in the maximum enhancement of the individual life," he asked whether democracy has become outmoded and whether "our youth will be willing to trade liberty and democracy for a promised security and what is inherent in such an exchange."

Both fascism and communism, he said, were attempts to solve an apparently world-wide social crisis and were attempts which appear to have worked, for the present at least.

The speaker was introduced by Senator Robert M. La Follette, jr., of Wisconsin. John W. Studebaker, United States Commissioner of Education, presided at the meeting. Among those present was Mrs. W. Bayard Cutting, of New York City, mother of the late Senator Cutting and founder of the memorial lecture series.

$9,000 Subscribed To Churches' Fund

More than $9,000 in cash and pledges was reported last night at a dinner closing the annual budget campaign of the Washington Federation of Churches at the First Congregational Church. Officials said complete reports are expected to bring the total above the $13,500 goal set when the campaign opened.

The drive will be continued, it was said, among the 144 congregations affiliated with the federation until the goal is reached. Workers were praised by Dr. Horace E. Cromer, president of the federation.

Jones Knocks Out Abrams in Fifth Round of Fight

This Morning

Baseball on the Air Is Ticklish Stuff.

By Shirley Povich.

Orlando, Fla.

A week before the opening-game clamor of the major league season is heard throughout the land on April 18, seventy smooth-talking gentlemen will foregather in a downtown Chicago hotel and get their orders from the higher-ups.

POVICH.

They will be the 70 fellows who will man the radio microphones in more than half of the major league and high minor league parks. They are the broadcasters in the hire of a nationally-known cereal firm which has acquired a near monopoly on all baseball broadcasts.

At the Chicago session, the announcers will be schooled by General Mills, Inc., which is sponsoring the broadcasts in the interest of its No. 1 breakfast food. General Mills, Inc., has a standard form for the baseball broadcast it sponsors. The firm is very touchy about any deviation from the rules by the men at the microphones.

It's always good weather at the ball games, as far as General Mills is concerned. Its announcers for years have had definite orders to remind their listeners that the paying customers at the park are enjoying themselves. If the sun is shining and the day is perfect, that must be emphasized. If it's too darn hot and your collar is wilting out there at the park, no radio announcer must bring that up. He must say that the sun is nature's own cure for most ills.

Weather Always Good.

If it is too cold, much too cold, at the ball park, then the radio man must not mention that, unless he says that it is a bit nippy—not too nippy, of course—but just enough to lend a crispy touch that is surely invigorating. And if it's damp, or raining, why that of course is never brought up. The weather must never be mentioned when it's raining.

It's the firm's way of playing ball with the baseball magnates. It was on the promise that radio broadcasts would stimulate attendance that the sponsors were able to sell their idea to the club owners in the first place. They are eager to prove that argument and each announcer has his instructions to drum up trade for the baseball people.

It is because General Mills has played ball so thoroughly with the big league owners that the firm has been able to buy the broadcasting rights for nine of the 13 major league parks which permit broadcasting. The big leagues lean toward General Mills in the bidding for broadcasting rights because of these methods. So thoroughly appreciative was Clark Griffith of General Mills' good-will campaign for baseball that last fall he sold the broadcasting rights to the Washington Club's games to General Mills at a price $10,000 beneath the offer made by a rival cereal firm. Honest!

Panning Is Taboo.

The sponsors have almost surpassed themselves in their attempts to keep the faith with the baseball people. Every General Mills announcer has his orders never to put the team, the players or the umpires on the pan. It is always a well-played ball game as far as its radio men are concerned. The lug-head second baseman who would have had a double play if he hadn't neglected to touch second base is never criticized by the men at the microphone. That is orders. He must describe the play as almost a double play—"pretty close, yes, pretty close."

Thus the radio can hardly compete with the press accounts in a truly accurate description of the proceedings on the field. Newspapermen in the press box, unfettered by an obligation to the club owners, can call the offending second baseman a lug-head in print, or even worse, if the spirit moves him. And if it's damp or wet at the ball game, that's what it is. If it's too hot it can be described as stifling and if it's too cold the chances are that the press box occupants will come right out and say that the 800 fans in the park are risking pneumonia and must want to see a ball game pretty badly.

Hires Bill Slocum.

The breakfast food people apparently are definitely committed to baseball broadcasts as an advertising medium. This year General Mills has deemed its baseball interest so vital that it has hired Bill Slocum, for 30 years a New York baseball writer, to superintend its broadcasts.

Slocum, who has been touring the major league training camps in the South, cementing friendships between General Mills and club owners and managers, will presently betake himself to the Pacific Coast in the interest of his firm's broadcasts there. His chief job is to guard against any dissatisfaction on the part of club owners. The Kellogg Co. is bidding spiritedly for the broadcasting rights now held by General Mills in several cities and Slocum is attempting to fend off that threatened invasion.

With the New York clubs—including Brooklyn—in agreement against permitting any games to be broadcast from their parks, Detroit commands the highest price for its broadcasting rights. Chicago is a close second with Cleveland third. The sponsors attempt to arrive at a fair price scientifically. They gauge their listening audience from the number of automobile registrations in the range of the station and procure from the Federal bureaus the number of "radio homes" in the territory. It has all become very scientific.

Six Favored Quints Win In Post Play

D. & H. Unlimited Five Easy Winner; Nine Games Wednesday.

By Merrell W. Whittlesey.

Delaware and Hudson's five, boasting a line-up studded with former college, high school and unlimited stars, made its debut in the eleventh annual Post-A. A. U. court tournament last night at Roosevelt High with a convincing 45-30 rout of the Latter Day Saints quintet. Three favored 145-pound teams also were victorious on the four-game card.

In the evening's inaugural, the strong W. W. Chambers five overcame a 4-point deficit at half time to win over the Police Boys' Club No. 4 quintet by a 31-to-25 margin, while Columbia Beverage's veteran dribblers routed the Eckington A. C. by a 42-to-14 margin and Salvation Army's highly touted entry toyed with the Georgetown Boys' Club to win by a 35-to-14 score.

The favored Chambers five, led by George Bozievich, former Silver Spring High ace, trailed 18-14 at the half but took the lead 24-23 with five minutes to play and finally won out by a 6-point margin.

The Columbia Beverage team, finalists in the 145-pound division for five consecutive years prior to last year, was too strong for the Eckington five in every style of play and paced by the Schaeffer brothers won by a 28-point margin.

A pair of lighter class games were played at Merrick and Washington Boys' Clubs, with the Y. M. C. A. five, paced by Horn, trouncing the Boys' Club 130-pounders at Merrick by a 32-12 count, while in the other contest the Merrick 115-pounders drubbed the Georgetown Branch of the Boys' Club by a 9-point margin, 23 to 14. The scoring for both teams was well divided.

The D and H Latterday Saints battle, proved the highly-touted Coalmen to be a real tourney threat in the unlimited division, as they took an early lead against the eventual losers and from there it was just a question as to how big the gap would be at thel fina whistle.

Milt Goss, towering center and Burdette Cogar, former Hyattsville ace, each scored 12 points while Knocky Thomas, Ben Zola, Milt Genderson, Bernie Lieb and Don Fones were all prominent in the victory.

Camilli O.K. On Contract

Dolf to Get $14,000 With Dodgers.

By the Associated Press.

Clearwater, Fla., March 21.—Dolf Camilli, slugging first baseman of the Brooklyn Dodgers, signed his 1938 contract today. Terms were not announced but baseball observers believe Camilli will draw at least $14,000.

Camilli, a persistent hold-out with the Phillies, recently was purchased by he Dodgers for a reported $65,000. He received $11,500 from the Phillies last season.

After coming to terms with General Manager Larry MacPhail, Camilli went to the ball park and engaged in his first training drill.

Westchester A. C.'s nine defeated the Glover Park A. C. diamonders in an early season game yesterday at Glover Park by a 4 to 0 markin. L. Newmyer and D. Crowell snared three hits apiece for the winners while Catcher Grimstead was the defensive ace.

Abrams Ponders Kayo Punch That 'Didn't Hurt'—Just Dazed

Capital Battler Can't Figure It All Out as He Returns to Arena Dresing Room.

George Abrams unwittingly portrayed a Dr. Jekyl-Mr. Hyde role last night at the Arena, one before going forth to box Jimmy Jones the feature bout, the other after plodding back to the dressing room a battered and beaten boy.

"Where am I," he mumbled sitting on the long, lean dressing-room bench after being counted out in the fifth round.

"You're at the Arena kid, remember? You made a great fight of it, too. You're all right. How do you feel? Any pain, or anything?"

"No, I feel all right. He wagged his head slowly. "Nothing wrong with me. I'm not hurt. But everything seems so funny, I can't get used to it.

He actually suffered no sustained harm from the fight. The knockout punch was a mental erasure that rubbed out all sense of time and perspicacity. How Abrams got to the Arena, what he was there for, who he fought, and the result were questions he couldn't answer.

His manager, Syd Fishel, took him into the shower and watched while he bathed his reddened face. He dressed quickly, but was still dazed after donning street regalia.

Jones, a seasoned campaigner, pushed his way through a small circle of friends surrounding Abrams as he sat on the bench still in fighting togs.

"Thanks," was all George said.

Jones was elated by the victory. His brother, Ivan Nedomatsky, who win in the semifinal and was in street clothes, grabbed him by the shoulders as he entered the dressing room.

"Nice going."

"I really gave it to him, didn't I," Jones replied with a smile.

"How d'ya feel," asked a bystander.

"Great. I was getting stronger every minute. I was just waiting for that one. When the chance came I let him have it. He was wide open and I gave it to him.

Junior Wrestlers To Weigh In Today

Tom Clayton, chairman of the A. A. U. wrestling committee, announced last night that the deadline for the Junior Wrestling championships is today. Weighing-in will be held this afternoon from 3:30 to 5:30, at the boys' Y. M. C. A., 1732 G street northwest.

The Police Boys Club plan to enter a combined team from four of its branches. A team from the Washington Boys Club and one from the Merrick Boys Club will be entered. Devitt Athletic Club, winners of the event last year, is also entered this year.

Grades Worry Terp Coaches

Baseball and Lacrosse Stars Suffering.

Baseball and lacrosse coaches at the University of Maryland are looking with hopeful eyes at the powerful committee on scholastic standing—hoping the committee will send two stars back to the athletic wars.

Coach Jack Faber, who has only four veterans around whom to build the lacrosse team, wants a clean bill of scholastic health for Bobby Neilson all-America attack man last year.

Faber is depnding on defense men Frank Lee and Parker Lindsey; Neilson and George Watson as attack men and Johnny Muncks and Haskin Deeley, as goalies.

Charley Norton, one of the best Maryland pitchers in recent years, is the scholastic worry of the baseball team. Norton was declared ineligible during the recent basketball season but probably will regain favorable status by the opening of the baseball season.

Track Coach Geary Eppley has no scholastic worries on the squad and smiles over the best prospects in years.

Topping the tracksters are two outstanding distance men, Mason Chronister and Jim Jehoe. Chronister, in the recent indoor games in Baltimore, outran Gene Venzke in the mile, finishing third to Glenn Cunningham and Archie San Romani.

The squad is weak in field events.

Tennis coach Les Bopst is grooming a team which should be the best in Maryland history. Included are Al Ritzenberg, Washington, and Nathan Askin, Baltimore, well known in tennis circles of this section.

Greenbelt Winner.

Greenbelt's high-scoring five trounced the Interstate Commerce Commission dribblers by a 41 to 28 margin last night at Greenbelt. Sidwell's 20 points paced the winners' attack.

Chase and Krakauskas Alarm Nat Bosses

By Shirley Povich.

A Staff Correspondent.

Orlando, Fla., March 21.—Panic in a mild form set in today at the Nats' training camp where Manager Bucky Harris and Owner Clark Griffith are beginning to wonder if they haven't been overestimating the talents of the prize rookie pitchers—Ken Chase and Joe Krakauskas.

Publicly, they dismissed lightly the miserable performances of the two young southpaws against the Tigers in their first outing of the season yesterday, but the Nats' bosses showed grave concern in the squad's practice today.

Griffith, who prides himself on his knowledge of pitching, styles and tactics, personally ordered Chase and Krakauskas to quit the squad workout and led them to one side for a bit of schooling.

The 68-year-old owner of the Nats, who spent 20 years on big-league pitching mounds, found considerable fault with the forward stride of both of his rookies and commanded them to take a longer step before delivering the ball. He called Coach Nick Altrock and the veteran Wes Ferrell to illustrate his point.

Griffith discovered also that Chase and Krakauskas were losing control because of their habit of treading on their toes when letting the pitch go instead of taking a flat-footed stride.

"You fellows wobble when you stride on the toe of your foot," declared Griffith to the rookies. "You can't develop good control unless you have a solid stance. Look at Ferrell. Notice how he comes down flat-footed when he takes his forward stride. No pitcher who doesn't do that is any account."

The pasting which the two pitchers took from the Detroit Club on Sunday, a performance that Griffith watched, was thorough and complete. Chase walked the first three men to face him and was whacked solidly during the three innings he pitched. Krakauskas was just plain ineffective in his three-inning turn.

Inasmuch as they are the two pitchers from whom the Nats' bosses have been anticipating a sensational season, Griffith and Harris are no little disappointed, if not downright alarmed. But the Nats' owner refused to express any concern.

"These early games don't count," he said. "Some pitchers are slow

Rutherfurds Set 3 World Boat Marks

Noted Pilot Sends Juno at 89.776-an-Hour Speed in Florida.

By the Associated Press.

Miami Beach, Fla., March 21.—Jack Rutherfurd, of Palm Beach, broke his own world record twice with the gold cup boat Juno today and his wife, Maude, not to be outdone, borrowed a 225-class hydroplane and drove it to a new record.

Rutherfurd barely missed his 90-mile-an-hour goal with the Juno, originally built for use by a Chinese "suicide squadron." Two hours after cracking his previous record of 84.6065 miles an hour, set last September at Washington, Rutherfurd came back and sent the nonsupercharged 12-cylinder boat roaring over the mile course at 89.776 miles an hour.

Mrs. Rutherfurd, given the wheel after one attempt had failed, drove George C. Cannon's Gray Goose to a new 225 record of 73.5445 miles an hour. Hugh Gingras of Rockledge, Fla., figuring the smaller Mrs. Rutherfurd might get more speed out of the boat, relinquished the Gray Goose after his best effort, 72.435, had fallen short of the record 73.171 set by Jack Cooper, of Kansas City, in the Tops 2d at Red Bank, N. J., last August.

Rutherfurd first broke his old record with a speed of 88.670 miles an hour. Dissatisfied, he made an unofficial test run alone at 90.339, then set up the new record with S. Mortimer Auerbach, of Atlantic City, in the boat with him.

The Juno was rebuilt here after capsizing last September in the second heat of the President's Cup Regatta at Washington. The boat was designed to carry a projectile, with the idea of ramming a large vessel with it, the driver sacrificing his life. The Juno was converted into a racing boat when the persons who ordered it failed to produce the money.

Golf Rulings Are Changed

U. S. G. A. Modifies Its New Stymie Proviso.

By Merrell W. Whittlesey.

A minor change on the recently adopted stymie ruling was announced by the executive committee of the United States Golf Association today while two footnotes were also adopted, on the marking and addition-of-scores-rule and the 14-club limitation.

The substitute stymie rule, announced at the annual meeting of the U. S. G. A. in January, called for a ball lying within six inches of the hole, at the option of the player or opponent, to be lifted until the other ball is played and then replaced. This was in addition to the ball nearest the hole being lifted if the balls were in six inches of each other.

The change specifically requires that both balls must be on the putting green for a player to lift the nearer ball when within six inches of the hole or of the other ball.

The change eliminates doubt as to whether a ball within six inches of the hole may be lifted regardless of whether the second ball was within two or 200 yards of the cup.

The rule provides that no alteration can be made on any card after it has been returned. If a competitor returns a lower score than actually played he shall be disqualified. The committee shall be responsible for additions.

The footnote agrees with the competitor being responsible for the correct score being reported but makes the marker answer to the accuracy of the addition. However, the penalty still lies with the player reporting the score and none with the marker.

The other question: If a player starts a round with 14 clubs and one becomes unfit for play, is he obliged to make replacement with an identical club, has been answered in the negative.

The executive committee decided the player may replace an unfit club with any club he desires, provided the number in his bag does not exceed 14. Thus if you smash your seven-iron, or the wrapping is loosened, you can send after that extra driver, or putter. If a player starts with less than 14 clubs he may add up to that number during the round.

Born offered stubborn resistence throughout, but was no match for his opponent.

Nedomatsy Wins Over Brookman

Pitts, Jamison and Dell Win in Prelims of Program.

By Lewis F. Atchison.

George Abrams' blissful dream of middleweight fistic glory took a nightmarish turn last night at Turner's Arena where the hitherto undefeated local candidate was knocked cold by Jimmy Jones in the fifth round of a scheduled eight-round bout.

The finishing punch, a round-house right, a "sucker" punch in the fight game parlance, crashed up against Abrams' fully exposed chin one minute and 40 seconds after the start of the round. It brought a near-capacity audience of 1,800 fans to their feet in stunned silence—staring in amazement at the sight of Abrams stretched full length in the ring, both eyes shut tightly and not a muscle moving.

The fallen warrior's labored breathing seemed to keep pace with Pat O'Connor's wooden mallot as he tolled off the fatal 10. His head struck the canvas with a sickening thud as he went down, and if he wasn't rendered unconscious by the blow, the impact of his head striking the floor insured insensibility.

Nedomatsky Is Victor.

The knockout made it a perfect night for the Jones boys, as Ivan Nedomatsky, Jones' brother, defeated El Brookman in the six-round semifinal after knocking him down twice in the first round and again in the second. But it was Nedomatsky all the way in that one, whereas Jones was behind on points before connecting with the decisive punch.

Jones' victory was as sudden as it was surprising. A right to the jaw, delivered with both feet off the canvas—a la Joey Archibald, staggered Abrams, driving him into the ropes. Slightly dazed by the blow, Abrams fell into a clinch and Referee Ray Bowen moved in to separate them.

Bowen broke them without stepping in between and Abrams, apparently waiting for Jones to be pushed back a pace, stood there with his arms almost at his sides in no position to defend himself. Quick to size up the situation, Jones uncoiled a looping but terrific right. Abrams couldn't raise his arms to defend himself and tried to roll with the blow. But his dulled senses reacted too slowly and he was tagged flush on the button.

He Spun Around.

He spun halfway around from force of it and fell backward to the floor.

On The Post score sheet, Abrams was far ahead on points when knocked out. He held his own in the first round; won the second and third by comfortable margins, and held his own again in the fourth. Even in the fifth and final session he was doing well enough until caught off-guard by Jones' leaping right.

He took Jones' vaunted body punching in stride in the first four rounds, and shook off several hard rights to the head without visible effects, meanwhile scoring heavily with his own punching to the mid-section and head. He caught the Baltimorean cleanly several times, but apparently didn't have enough power in the mitten to put him down. Jones did.

Nedomatsky started in quickly, walking out of his corner and knocking Brookman down with a right hook to the head. He took nine, but was still groggy and bewildered when he arose, and Ivan went after him like a hunter stalking his prey. He caught him, too, flooring him a second time with a left hook to the head, and Brookman took another nine.

Brookman stayed on his bicycle throughout the third, and Nedomatsky chased him cooly, almost nonchalantly, feeling that he could flatten the Washington youth when and where he pleased. But Brookman surprised by rallying in the third with a nice exhibition of boxing and won the round. He shook up Ivan with two stiff rights to the midsection.

Nedomatsky resumed earnest work in the fourth and bothered his man considerably with a two-fisted barrage to the body, varied occasionally by rights to the head. Brookman was wobbly at the bell. The Baltimorean continued his unrelenting attack throughout the fifth and sixth, and staggered El in the latter rounds, but Brookman was game to the core and fighting back at the final bell.

In the preliminaries, Zuzu Pitts, Negro featherweight, outpointed "Kayo" Clark in a slow four-rounder that opened the show. Al Jamison won a majority decision from Tommy Hoover, despite the presence of "Evil Eye" Ben Finkel in the latter's corner, and Carroll Dell won a majority verdict over Sam Bacala.

Hitchcock Recuperating.

Baltimore, March 21 (AP).—An operation on the knee of Billy Hitchcock, captain of the Auburn baseball team and star halfback, was pronounced a success today by his attending physician, Dr. George E. Bennett, at Johns Hopkins Hospital. Dr. Bennett said the operation was performed last Thursday and that Hitchcock's condition was "fine."

Bar May Keep Local Player On Sidelines

Pro May Not Be Able to Take Part in Many Tournaments.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Pinehurst, N. C., March 21. Leo Walper, of Washington, D. C., champion of the Middle Atlantic section of the P. G. A., and well-known tournament golfer, stated today that he had been suspended from the P. G. A. by action of officers of his section who "acted without giving me a hearing on information furnished by George Jacobus, president of the P. G. A."

Walper, who arrived yesterday to participate in the North and South Open championship, stated that he intended to fight the suspension to the limit as it would mean that he would not be eligible to play in the P. G. A. championship and possibly other events upon which he depended for a portion of his income and to protect his reputation in professional golf.

"The action," said Walper, "was taken as a result of a purely personal matter between Jacobus and myself in Florida. It had nothing whatever to do with the P. G. A. and it is unfair for Jacobus to use his political position as president of the P. G. A. to injure my earning capacity and my reputation as a professional. Just why my own section acted without giving me a hearing I do not understand but I intend to find out."

Walper is the present Middle Atlantic P. G. A. titleholder, winning the tournament last year at the Chamberlin Country Club, Old Point Comfort, Va., over an all-star field that included Wiffy Cox, Errie Ball, and the outstanding members of the Mid-Atlantic P. G. A.

He was also second to Wiffy Cox in the District Open at Indian Spring and was one of the outstanding stars of the Sunday afternoon exhibition matches. Walper was also in the money in a majority of the pro-amateur events last season.

The former Bethesda driving range mentor had an auspicious rise in the pro ranks, as several years ago he did well to break 80. But constant practice improved his game until he has become known as one of the outstanding professionals of the sector.

Walper was the proprietor of a driving range in Bethesda that has been taken over by a shopping center. He has made the winter tour with the "name" professionals for the past two years. He played the entire circuit in 1937 and made several good showings. This year he confined his activities to the Florida and Georgia events. He paired with Wes Ferrell, Nat pitcher, to win a pro-amateur event.

Walper was a quarter-finalist in the National P. G. A. at Pinehurst in 1936 and, if the suspension holds, he will be unable to play in the event carded at nearby Shawnee-on-the-Belaware in July. It would also bar him from the Middle Atlantic event at Old Point in April, and from all the scheduled events on the local P. G. A. card.

He was to have made the tour of the summer events, according to reports.

Hi, Senator!

That's What Mr. Bonura Likes to Be.

Vice President Garner wondered for a moment today if the United States had suddenly acquired a ninety seventh Senator.

He received this telegram:

"Remember you got your wish. I am a Senator now."

He finally remembered. He once told Zeke Bonura—a baseball player—that he'd like to see him in a Washington uniform. Last Friday the Washington Senators obtained Bonura from the Chicago White Sox in a trade.

The Brighter Side of the Fight Game: Baer and Son; Farr and Fiancee

Like almost everything else, the fight game has its tough side. And like almost everyone else, fighters enjoy life outside the ring even as the rest of us. On the left, at Oakland, Calif., Maxie Baer is shown with his family. Daddy has a bad eye all right, but he defeated Tommy Farr so little Maxie and his mother are happy as they welcome Big Max home. Right—To the victor may belong the spoils, but the loser, England's game Tommy Farr, isn't faring so badly, thank you. His engagement to Eileen Wenzel, former Ziegfeld Follies dancer, was announced yesterday. The two are shown in this Wirephoto at a party in their honor in New York's famous Rainbow Room.

Winners of the Ranger-American and Montreal-Chicago series play a best of three series next week to determine which meets the winner of the Boston-Toronto meeting for the Stanley Cup.

The Bruins tonight were 8-5 favorites. The Leafs were quoted 3-1 against winning the cup while the Rangers were 11-5. Les Canadiens are 6-1. The Americans 10-1 and the Black Hawks, 15-1.

Rome May Bid For 1944 Games

Cairo, Egypt, March 21 (AP).—Rome still may bid for the 1944 Olympic games, it developed today.

There was considerable surprise when Rome was not among the cities announced as seeking the 1944 games, but Olympic officials pointed out that the Italian city could enter its bid at any time prior to the I. O. C. meeting in London next year.

London, Helsingfors, Athens, Budapest and Lausanne were the five cities announced as definite bidders for the 1944 games.

Farr to Wed Because Marriage 'Did Maxie Baer So Much Good'

English Fighter Flies to Los Angeles With Fiancee; Plans Vacation, Then Ceremony in England.

By the Associated Press.

Los Angeles, March 21.—Tommy Farr, the Welsh heavyweight, is going to marry a former Follies dancer, Eileen Wenzel, because "marriage has done so much for Max Baer."

"I beat Baer in London when he was just an ordinary fighter," Farr told reporters after flying here from Chicago with Miss Wenzel. "Now he's a married man, the father of a boy, and when he beat me recently he fought like a man who was determined to feed his family well.

"If marriage did Baer so much good it may be my remaking."

Farr said he and Miss Wenzel would spend about two months here and then go to England for the wedding.

They passed through Chicago last night by plane and arrived here today to visit Miss Wenzel's sister, Mrs. Nils T. Granlund, of Hollywood.

Granlund, known as "N. T. G." who is master of ceremonies at a hotel night club here, met the couple's plane and announced they would be married "soon," in California.

Farr confirmed the announcement, denied they were married already and had his "spot of tea" in the airport restaurant before they left.

Miss Wenzel, "Miss St. Louis" in the 1925 beauty pageant at Atlantic City and starred subsequently in Ziegfeld productions, was injured in New York June 19, 1932, while riding in an automobile with Louis J. Ehret, jr., brewery heir.

2 Jockeys Are Injured in Four-Horse Spill at Tropical Park Track

Outdoors

With

Bill Ackerman.

The Post's All Outdoors Editor.

That old "hope eternal springs" fits none quite so well a sit does an angler, in particular, him finding the ultimate of his sport in the clear, cold waters of mountain streams.

For weeks, there has been a restless activity in these ranks. Passing them in the street, you hear, "It won't be long now," or "Where yuh goin' opening day, Bill?"

ACKERMAN.

Many, who for as long as can be remembered, have "opened" on some one of the four streams between Frederick and Thurmont, are wondering whether the 6 to 15 hundred anglers usually fishing them aren't going to find three of them overcrowded, due to the fact the controlled fishing on Big Hunting Creek will permit but a hundred to fish there.

Bill Leetch remarks "it might be a good idea to stay at home." Our bet is—neither he nor any others of the trout-fishing fraternity will stick to any such resolution.

One thought, not at all hard to take, is that this year, many Pennsylvanians will not buy a Maryland license for a few days out before their own season opens on the fifteenth. Particularly so, with Sunday fishing in their own State; the primary reason for their fishing these streams in the past.

Or, if you happen to be one of the many having a trailer parked around somewhere waiting for the warmer days to come, take a leaf from the book of Willard Ayers. Make your fishing more enjoyable by using the one to get to the other. He has consistently fished streams farther away without any of the attendant hurry to get there and back, which is very probably the reason his luck has been exceptional.

Being able to have a temporary home right alongside your sport in the usually cold days of the early season isn't at all hard to take.

* * * * *

Neither does it take a long stretch of the imagination to think how enjoyable would be the working of a mile or two of fast, noisy mountain water from the first crack of dawn through the several following rose-tinted hours.

If you are asking us, Willard, that's really living.

* * * * *

An hour or two for anything that might suit your fancy, even a return engagement with the bunk—then back to the stream for the evening hours. Just the time for that big brown lunker to feed, for it is doubtful if anything would have enticed him from under his shelving bank during the hours of midday. Or it might be a well-placed fly would be inducement enough to make that rainbow, hanging just ahead of the big boulder in the break of the current and weighing all of two pounds, think he would like to have it.

Snag on to either one and the day will be complete.

Hal R. Mohat, 1309 North Kirkwood road, Arlington, Va., asks, "Can you tell us of a place on the bay where it is possible to cast for rock, sea trout and blues?"

For the last, it is very improbable anywhere in our section. The sea trout might be so taken during the late September along a grassy shore, such as the one you will find from Piney Point to Bretons Bay. For the stripers, a shore where the bank drops straight down, like that around Point Patience on the Patuxent, is your best bet in the spring and, through the summer, casting into the school as they rise to the surface. Through the fall months, almost any shoal bank in the neighborhood of the schools will supply fairly good sport by casting, such as off the mouth of West River, Cove Point and Cedar Point at the mouth of the Patuxent, and Town Point and the shores on both sides of it, just across from Solomons Island.

Runamuck Falls, Piles Up Others

Johnny Jaekle Suffers Broken Leg; Wimmer Breaks Collarbone.

By the Associated Press

Tropical Park, Fla., March 21.—Two jockeys were injured and two other riders badly shaken up as a result of a spectacular spill in the last race here today. Four horses went down in the accident.

Johnny Jaekle was reported as having a broken leg, while Bill Wimmer suffered a broken collarbone. Both boys were rushed to University Hospital for treatment.

Beverly Hacker and Herb Simmons were stunned. They were to be examined further for possible injuries.

The four horses escaped serious injury.

The jam occurred near the quarter pole, or midway of the last bend.

Runamuck, with Simmons up, appeared to stumble. When that mare fell, Starwick, Fidelis and Genaibi also were victims. Runamuck fell over the inside rail.

Jaekle was astride Fidelis and Wimmer on Genaibi. Hacker rode Starwick. Runamuck was running in fifth position just before she got caught in the jam, with the others not far behind her.

A later report from the track emergency quarters was that Hacker also was sent to the hospital. At first he appeared uninjured but it was feared he might have internal injuries and further examination was necessary to determine his condition.

Lady Higloss, favorite in the open betting affair, wound up fifth. Many observers thought that Panther Creek might have won under stronger handling.

The three horses in the money and Como No II are eligible for the $10,000 Tropical Handicap closing day, but the April 9 fixture is at a mile and a sixteenth.

Double B likes this strip, but he was temporarily outrun. Como No II, which, like Vitelio, is a Chilean invader, led b. a narrow margin for three furlongs, with James A., a 5-year-old maiden, and Panther Creek in close attendance. Lady Higloss followed, in front of the ultimate winner.

Double B began to find his best stride around the last turn and was sent between horses. After entering the stretch he assumed a narrow advantage over James A and Panther Creek as Como No II "chucked it." The result was in doubt until the wire was reached, but it was clear that the powerful Arcaro's mount kept his nose in front.

American Byrd, making his second trip to the post, ran the fastest half mile of the meeting to win the opening dash, for 2-year-old maidens. The W. H. Whitehouse colorbearer recently burned up considerable "smart money" in his debut when he ran away before the start and ruined his chances.

He maintained his position gamely the last half mile, but never seriously threatened the leaders. GODDESS FRANK worked his way up on the extreme outside.

DIDUTELLUS, vigorously urged, gradually bettered her position while slipping through on the inside the last 3 furlongs and, closing with determination when the final issue came, wore her opponents down the last 20 yards. CRIMEA, quickest to begin, showed the most early speed, she came slightly wide entering the stretch, yet held on namely to outlast GENEVRA M. in the stretch drive. DOUBLE B., displaying sudden improved form under energetic handling, responded courageously when the real issue came and outlasted his opponents. JAMES A. forced a rapid early pace and raced COMO NO II into defeat in the early stages. He saved ground turning into the stretch, made a game effort when put to a drive, but could not stave off the winner's bid. PANTHER CREEK broke well, but was repeatedly taken back until reaching the stretch turn. He swung to the outside, finished gamely through the stretch, but Scheih rode a weak finish. VITELIO closed stoutly the final furlong after a slow beginning. LADY HIGLOSS, strongly urged and saving ground all the way, had no excuses. COMO NO II showed high speed for a half mile and then retired.

SIXTH RACE—One mile and 60 yards. Purse, $900; claiming. For 3-year-olds. Start good for all but DO IT. Won easily; place drive. Went to post at 4:34. Off at 4:58. Winner, J. H. Logan's ch. f. SOUGHT AFTER outbroke the field, opened up a commanding lead the early running and held away under brisk pressure the last half mile. DARK MAY, a forward contender the entire trip, responded gamely in the final drive and outlasted DOHOEV. The latter, outrun early, circled the field after leaving the backstretch and closed stoutly. CRACK ALL, nearest in pursuit of the leader in the early running, faltered in the stretch run. MY WO broke forwardly and went well up all the way, but never was able to engage the leaders.

STONE MARTIN, going forwardly on the outside under slight restraint until well around the lower turn, moved up gamely when placed to pressure and wore the leaders down through the stretch. SCUDDER broke alertly and rushed to the front, showed good speed and held on tenaciously under punishment when it came to a drive. FLEET STEP, nearest in pursuit of the leader all the way, made a game effort through the stretch, but could not get up. RUNAMUCK and STARWICK were compelled to pull up suddenly. RUNAMUCK stumbled while being straightened out and fell over the inside fence. STRAWICK went down on the track and FIDELIS and GENAIBI fell over them.

Mrs. Beard's 82 Leads Augusta Links Tourney Qualifying Round

Capital Girl Shoots 87 in First Round

Mrs. Charles Newbold Fires 83 for Second Spot in Tourney.

By the Associated Press.

Augusta, Ga., March 21.—Mrs. Warren Beard, of Boston, set the pace for a field of more than two-score feminine shotmakers today and captured medal honors in the eighth renewal of the Augusta woman's golf tournament.

A former Massachusetts State champion, Mrs. Beard put together rounds of 38-44 for a three-over-par 82, and nosed out Mrs. Charles Newbold, of Kansas City, who posted an 83 to lead the select field until late this afternoon.

Such seasoned performers as Dorothy Kirby, of Atlanta, Helen Dettweiler, of Washington, D. C., and Jean Bauer, of Providence, R. I., had to be content with higher scores. The Atlantan carded an 85, while the other two tied with 87's.

Miss Kirby had rounds of 44—41, Miss Dettweiler, 43—44, and Miss Bauer carded a 41 on the outgoing nine only to soar to 46 on the home stretch.

Others gaining the championship division were Mrs. Joseph Sloman, Baltimore, 88; Grace Amory, New York, 87; Alice Rutherford, Alamucky, N. J., 90; Mrs. T. E. Schluderberg, Baltimore, 91; Isabel Ogilvie, Cleveland, 89; Mrs. D. C. Howe, Philadelphia, 85; Katherine McClosky, Pittsburgh, 90; Ruth Haley, New York, 91; Mrs. Charles Harbough, Cleveland, 87; Barbara Bourne, New York, 90; Mrs. H. F. Trumaret, Boston, 89.

The pairings tomorrow are Beard vs. Sloman; Amory vs. Rutherford; Dettweiler vs. Schluderberg; Ogilvie vs. Howe; Kirby vs. McClosky; Haley vs. Harbough; Bauer vs. Bourne, and Trumaret vs. Newbold.

Marion Miley, winner last year, did not enter the tournament, returning to her home in Cincinnati with a badly sprained ankle which she suffered at Aiken, S. C., last week.

Nats' Bosses

rounding into form and the beatings they take in their first few games can't be held against them. Chase and Krakauskas will come along. They've got plenty of talent. You can't take away from 'em what they did last year. I don't think I'm mistaken in those boys."

Rick Ferrell, who caught the pair against the Tigers, didn't show any concern. "They'll be 30 per cent faster in a month," said Ferrell. "And that's what they'll win with—their fast balls. That game Sunday doesn't mean a thing. All they have to worry about is their control."

The Nats return to the exhibition wars tomorrow when Bill McKechnie leads his new charges, the Cincinnati Reds, into Orlando.

Bucky Harris will send the pitching trio who beat the Cardinals last week—Jimmy DeShong, Elon Hogsett and Monte Weaver to the mound against Cincinnati. With the Reds will be their old team-mate—but not eactly their old pal—Joe Cascarella, who was the chief disappointment of the Nats' pitching staff last year.

Wes Ferrell has made a request of Bucky Harris which has been granted. For some private reason, Ferrell asked to be excused from pitching against any American League clubs before the season started. The suspicion is that Ferrell does not want the American Leaguers to get a look at what he calls his new fast ball.

Orlando, Fla., March 21.—Owner Clark Griffith of the Washington Senators said today Leon "Goose" Goslin, former Detroit outfielder, "looks like he could get in pretty good condition."

The veteran Goslin, once ranked among the best hitters of the American League, has been working out at the Senators' spring training camp here.

They Don't Look Like Rasslers, Do They?

No, but these two fellows will do their stuff Thursday night at Turner's Arena in a benefit program, the proceeds of which will be given to the American Legion baseball team for new uniforms. Pancho Valdez is the gentleman on the left in the sombrero, while the cowboy on the right is Chief Chewacki. Both are cast in "villain" roles for the Turner fiesta.

Heavies in Spotlight

A. A. U. Ring Semifinal Round Tomorrow.

Heavyweights lumber into the scene tomorrow night as the District A. A. U. tournament resumes with 5 semi-final bouts at Turner's Arena, the first scheduled for 8 o'clock.

The evening also will mark the initial tourney appearance of fighters in the flyweight and light-heavyweight divisions, whose ranks are thinly populated this winter.

Jim Brady, Georgetown University heavy, and Don Adams, of the University of Maryland team, will appear on the card, Brady making his debut against Andy Keady, while Brady tangles with Leo Miller, of Fort Myer. Keady is unattached.

One of the evening's outstanding bouts involves Buddy Yocum, of the Merrick Club, and Angelo Pappas, Washington Boys Club, who made lasting impressions on those who saw them in previous appearances. A bantamweight, Yocum flattened Lou Gevinson's younger brother, Harry, last Saturday night in sensational style. Pappas won two decisions in comparatively easy fashion. They should provide plenty of fireworks when the bell rings.

Another promising battle looms in the featherweight class wherein Charlie Arnold, another Merrick representative, meets C. V. Crider, Fort Belvoir puncher. Chider, thus far, has been the tournament's biggest surprise, decisively whipping Jimmy Koustenas and Ed Kane, both of whom were rated serious threats for the title. He is an excellent ring general and packs a murderous wallop in the right mitten.

Arnold eliminated Leo Marcopolos and Joe Denman, both National Guardsmen, in his two tests, flooring Marcopolos and knocking out his second opponent in the second round. Not rated on par with Crider as a boxer, he hits harder, nevertheless, and is conceded a good chance of gaining the finals. The complete card:

The pairings:

112-Pound Class.

H. E Collins (W. B. C.) vs. William Maske (Colmar Manor); Bernie Ferry (Mercury A. C.) vs. Willie Tapp (Police B. C.).

135-Pound Class.

Joe E. Brown (Police B. C.) vs. Whitey France (Police B. C.); Jack Claggett (National Guard) vs. Carroll Wright (Police B. C.).

147-Pound Class.

160-Pound Class.

William Kemp (Police B. C.) vs. Charles Maimone (Police B. C.); Charlie Cox (Merrick) vs Ralph Harris (Ft. Belvoir).

175-Pound Class.

American U. Gridiron Sought by Redskins

The Washington Redskins, National League football champions, are seeking the use of American University's gridiron for practice next season, General Manager Jack Espey announced last night.

—New Nats, No. 9—

Jim Wasdell

He'll Have Bonura's Job Someday.

The best yardstick for gauging the potentialities of young James Charles Wasdell is the fact that Clark Griffith was content to separate himself from $20,000 to buy the lad from the Minnapolis club a year and a half ago . . . Because you know Mr. Griffith is no wastrel with his currency! . . . Little Jimmy answers to the name of James Charles when his mother wants to be severe with him . . . The records say that he is 5 feet, 11 inches tall, but he must have been bragging when he gave out that information to the American League publicity bureau . . . A better guess is that he's 5 feet 9 inches, which is small as ball players go, particularly first basemen . . . But anything that Wasdell sacrifices in reach around first base he counter-balances with his fancy footwork . . . And he has it all figured out very logically, that 90 per cent of the bad throws are throws into the dirt rather than overhead . . . And he'll tell you that a little fellow has a better chance of coming up with those low throws . . . James dad is in the employe of the City of Cleveland and Little Jimmy grew up in the Cleveland Indian's park where he was, successively, a gatherer of empty pop bottles, a scorecard seller and a bat boy . . . Cleveland signed him, farmed him out for a year at Nashville in 1936, and for some reason sold him to Minneapolis after he had batted .346 . . . Joe Engle, then director of the Nats' Chattanooga Club in the same league as Nashville, vowed to Griffith that Wasdell was a sure-fire big leaguer and urged his purchase . . . Red Kress and Carl Reynolds accompanied a sum of cash to Minneapolis in the deal . . . With the Nats last spring, Wasdell was impressive in training camp, but Joe Kuhel was fresh from a season in which he batted .323 and the rookie had little chance to oust him . . . When Kuhel slumped last season, Wasdell seemed destined for the job . . . And then the Nats traded Kuhel for Bonura, virtually shutting Wasdell out . . . He's sore about that and wants to be traded . . . But the Nats won't let him get away . . . He's only 21, can hit the ball for longer distances than any guy on the club except Bonura, and some day he'll have Bonura's job.

Bonura to Report In Camp Today

Orlando, Fla., March 21.—Big Zeke Bonura, missing from the Washington camp for the past two days, put an end to the worries of the Nats' bosses by announcing he would reach camp tomorrow. Legal affairs detained him at New Orleans, where he is in the fruit business, Bonura explained.

Several pounds overweight, Bonura will be far behind the remainder of the Washington squad in conditioning when he reports tomorrow.

Brown Goes On Mat Card

Kansas Boy to Meet Mexican Rassler.

Orville Brown, cyclonic Kansas grappler who stands opponents on their heads and makes their teeth rattle, last night was added to Thursday's wrestling program scheduled at the Arena. He will meet the highly unpopular Pancho Valdez, Mexican madman, in a 30-minute time-limit engagement.

The bout goes under the cofeatures that have Dr. John Murphy pitted against "Chief" Chewaki, and Dean Detton vs. "Chief" Sanooke, either of which could stand on its own merits. The more the merrier seems to be the management's motto, however.

Brown is best remembered here for his convincing victory over Walter Podolak, health instructor, whose health was seriously impaired by his introduction to Brown. The Kansas farmer knocked one of Podolak's vertebrae out of place, bent a couple of ribs and sent him home in wobbly condition. Master Orville is big and fairly good—as Senor Valdez undoubtedly will discover.

Valdez bumped into Dr. Murphy last week after a string of successes and was defeated, but remains unpopular enough to lure them back to the Arena. His "No savvey—no savvey" when guilty of fouling is tonic for the fans, especially the bald gent in row 3, who threatens to take the whole wrestling troupe one of these nights and bang the boys' heads together.

Murphy and Detton, incidentally, are headed for a collision, as a number of fans suspected, for Promoter Joe Turner has let it be known that they'll be thrown in together in the near future—if they go all right Thursday. The winner, to all intents and purposes, will be matched with Bronko Nagurski for the world title at the ball park early this summer. This is a highly prized plum both have been begging for, and if and when they do clash it should be a "shooting" match.—ATCHISON.

Should The U. S. Send Its Athletes To Japan In The 1940 Olympics?

The International Olympic Committee definitely decided to hold the Olympics in Tokyo in 1940. Yet officials of the British Amateur Athletic Association suggested that England should refuse to participate. How about the United States?

The Gallup Poll asked American voters what they thought of sending a team to Japan in 1940. For the results—

Foreign Markets.

By the Associated Press.

London, March 21.—Stock prices exhibited a firm tone today as the European tension relaxed and traders were also encouraged by the better Wall Street action. Trading was active and profit-taking sales were readily absorbed. Industrials were in good demand, especially coals, tobaccos and steels. Central European bonds rallied sharply. German liens gaining about 4 points. Transatlantic securities finished generally higher and home rails and mining issues held steady.

Paris—International securities moved irregularly with Suez Canal advancing more than 800 francs and Royal Dutch gaining about 20. Rentes finished 10 centimes down to 30 higher and the industrial group was generally firm at higher prices.

Liverpool—Wheat futures touched new lows for the season and final quotes were off 1¾d to 2¼d. Prices broke on the large world's weekly shipments and weakness in the North American markets today. Support in cotton futures was restricted by the dullness of textiles, but firmness of overseas markets attracted buying. Closing quotations were 1 to 2 points net higher.

Insurance Firm Is Celebrating 60th Birthday

Wolf & Cohen Founder Once U. S. Consul-General at Cairo, Egypt.

By Thomas M. Cahill.

Wolf & Cohen, Inc., old-established insurance organization of Washington, celebrates completion of 60 years of progress this week, its business being founded in 1878, by the late Simon Wolf. The founder had resigned as District Recorder of Deeds and had attempted after nine years in Government service, to re-assemble his law practice in which he had been engaged from 1862, until 1869, when President Grant appointed him to the foregoing position.

In 1878, Mr. Wolf was appointed local general agent for the old Penn Mutual Life Insurance Co., a representation which continued without interruption, until 1930. As was the custom in htose days, Mr. Wolf accepted gaencies for fire insurance as well as life insurance companies. An early company which Mr. Wolf represented was The Guardian of London, and this representation was continued until it withdrew from the United States. Today, the firm represents the American Alliance as a successor of the Great American, known in 1880 as the German-American Insurance Co. of New York.

HENRY KING.

In 1881, when Mr. Wolf's health declined, President Garfield offered him the position of consul-general at Cairo, Egypt. In fact, his appointment to that position is said to have been President Garfield's last official act, the commission being signed on the afternoon of July 1, 1881, the day before the President's assassination.

Cohen Starts as Office Boy.

Just before Mr. Wolf left for Egypt, Myer Cohen, who was to be his business associate, entered his employ in July, 1881, as an office boy, and was soon entrusted with all matters of important insurance work as well as a considerable law practice which Mr. Wolfe was rebuilding. Mr. Cohen was admitted to the bar in 1887, and practiced law continuously and successfully until September, 1930.

The Caledonian Insurance Co., of Scotland, appointed Wolf & Cohen as its first agent in Washington immediately upon its admission to business in the United States. Except for a brief interruption, the Niagara Fire Insurance Co. has been represented by the office since the early 80's. The Atlas Assurance Co. of London entered this office in 1893; the Security Insurance Co. of New Haven, in 1897, and the firm continues to represent these companies. In 1906, the firm was appointed agent for the Aetna Insurance Co. of Hartford, Conn., having been chosen from a list of applicants including almost every insurance agency in Washington, it is stated. Wheat Prices Fall to Near Season's Low

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, March 21.—Downward plunges of 2 cents a bushel took the Chicago wheat market today to within ⅛-cent of the season's bottom price record.

Houses with Eastern connections led the selling, which appeared to be mainly due to pronounced scantiness of export demand for North American wheat and to peace talk from Europe. Tumbles of values were in the face of an accelerated decrease of the United States wheat visible supply total and notwithstanding late reports of dust storms in Kansas.

At the close, Chicago wheat futures were ⅛@1⅜ cents under Saturday's finish, May 85⅞@86, July 82¾@83, corn ⅛ off to ¼ up, May 59¾@59⅞, July 61½, Oats ¼ down, rye showing 1⅝@1½ drop, and provisions 2 cents to 12 cents setback.

The Market

By Carlton A. Shively, A Special Correspondent.

Stock Tone Improves in Dull Trading; U. S. Bonds Advance; Wheat Prices Decline.

New York, March 21.—Financial markets had a firmer tone. Activity lessened in proportion to the fall in the tide of nervousness over war. Dollars held their strength against most European currencies, but the rush of frightened money subsided. United States bonds improved. Stocks were dull on a turnover of around 550,000 shares, the smallest in a week, but closed with gains predominating. May wheat dropped 1¼ cents to 85⅞ cents a bushel.

Clearing of the European war clouds under the soft spring zephyrs turned the thoughts of those persons interested in financial markets, industry, trade and economics to the greener fields at home. The prospect was regarded as only so-so at best and as something not quite so good as that at worst. A little expansion here and there seems to be taking place, but it woefully lacks the exuberance usually associated with March 21.

Premature Spring.

It was about a year ago that industry, after several years of depression, was shoving up, as the innocent crocus, in search of a kindly sky, only to be met by the stern warning from President Roosevelt that capital goods activity was much too great, that commodity prices were much too high (even though they were still considerably below the "objective" of the 1926 level), that American markets were attracting far too much capital from other and less favored parts of the world, and that a boom would have to be prevented at all costs. It was, but it is still too early to count the cost.

In the week-end news was the estimate of the American Iron & Steel Institute of steel production, which this week is expected to rise to 33.7 per cent of capacity. Last week the estimated rate was 32.1 per cent and a month ago it was 30.4 per cent, against 89.6 per cent a year ago. Sheet mills are now running at the best rate since the middle of last November, and if in the next few months they succeed in doubling their production, they may be able to operate at a profit—provided taxes, wages and Government control of prices do not catch up with them.

Cotton Plight.

Meanwhile, the outlook is none too pleasing in other directions. The president of the Cotton-Textile Institute said the textile industry is in "a state of deep distress," our trade with Europe is falling and our trade with Mexico has all but collapsed. The country is not in economic good health, but a few doses of common sense could quickly bring about a remarkable improvement.

The disappearance of war scares caused a pronounced diminution in the flow of hot money here, but the dollar remained strong against most currencies, possibly on trade payments which, because of this country's credit balance on visible account remain large. There was also a big decrease in gold hoarding enthusiasm in London, which brought down the sterling gold price 6 pence an ounce. The American equivalent of the London quotation for gold was about a cent higher than it was Saturday. If any gold was bought for shipment here today there could have been little or no profit in the transaction.

Gold Shares Rally.

In stocks the recoveries were the most pronounced in some of the groups which it was supposed a war would injure most. Gold shares recovered brickly. Homestake was buoyant with a gain of 3 or 4 points. By contrast, the stocks with Mexican connections experienced a mild run. American Smelting, U. S. Smelting and Howe Sound, owning mining properties in the southern country, dropped 2 to 5 points on the bright prospect of losing their silver mines.

American Telephone was another stock to feel the clammy hand of selling. The stock dropped to a new low price for the year on a 2-point decline. Food Machinery, Brown Shoe and Greene Copper, all inactive, yielded a good deal on one or two sales. United States Rubber preferred, on the other hand, stood out in the early trading. It rose 2 points to a new high price for the year. In the later trading the early gain was lost. The common also failed to hold an early gain.

Steel sold around 52 and then stopped at 51 most of the day. Thanks to the good start, giving additions of 1 to 3 points, the stock list was able to close with fractional gains for the majority of issues. While buying was lackadaisical, the rush of liquidation stopped. Under the cover of inactivity recessions took place in a number of low-priced stocks. Numerous issues selling at $5 a share or less sold at new low prices for the year.

Pure Oil.

All hope that the SEC might reconsider its request for the names of customers buying Pure Oil preferred from syndicate members vanished when the bankers read the letter sent out by the commission over the week-end. The SEC says that the purpose of the questionnaire could not be accomplished without the list of names. There is still a possibility that one or more of the syndicate will question the authority of the SEC to delve into customers' lists.

Steel Operations Advance to 33.7%

New York, March 21 (AP).—Operations in the steel industry for the current week will advance 1.6 points to 33.7 per cent of capacity, compared with 32.1 per cent last week, the American Iron & Steel Institute estimated today. A month ago operations were at the rate of 30.4 per cent while a year ago they stood at 89.6 per cent of capacity.

Cotton Crop Of Last Year All-Time Peak

Total of 18,934,153 Bales Tops 1926 Record of 17,978,000 Bales.

By the Associated Press.

The Census Bureau reported yesterday final ginning figures of the 1937 cotton crop, placing production at 18,241,726 running bales, or 18,934,153 equivalent 500-pound bales, exclusive of linters.

The crop is the largest ever produced. It compared with 12,398,882 equivalent 500-pound bales in the 1936 crop, 19,638,391 bales in the 1935 crop, and 14,667,000 bales, the five-year (1928-32) average. Heretofore the record was 17,978,000 bales, produced in 1926. The Department of Agriculture in its final estimate of the crop in December placed indicated production at 18,746,000 equivalent 500-pound bales.

Round bales, counted as half bales, included in the figures totaled 326,425, compared with 282,262 for 1936, and 294,253 for 1935. American-Egyptian cotton included totaled 10,968 bales, compared with 17,551 for 1936, and 17,619 for 1935.

The gross weight of the bale for the crop, counting round as half bales and excluding linters, is 519.0 pounds, compared with 510.6 pounds for 1936, and 510.5 pounds for 1935.

1,000 Banks Hold 77% of Deposits

New York, March 21.—Total deposits for the first 1,000 of the country's 14,700 banks (exclusive of mutuals) on December 31, 1937, were $37,697,896,000, completion of the roll call of the 1,000 largest banks in the United States by the American Banker today reveals. This represents about 77 per cent of the estimated total deposits at the year-end in all commercial banks of the United States.

The 100 largest United States commercial banks had 52 per cent of the total with deposits of $25,567,391,100. The second 100 banks had about 8 per cent with $3,975,589,500. The third 100 accounted for 4½ per cent of the total and the fourth 100 not quite 3 per cent.

The other 600 of the 1,000 largest commercial banks hold bout 9 per cent of the total deposits in all banks.

E. L. Cord Acquires 690,000 Mine Shares

E. L. Cord, of Los Angeles, a principle shareholder, acquired 690,000 common shares of Black Mammoth Consolidated Mining in January, the Securities and Exchange Commission reported yesterday. The transaction was among those shown in a commission compilation of security purchases and sales by corporation officers, directors or principal owners during January. Other transactions were:

George W. Mason, of Detroit, an officer of Nash Kelvinator Corporation, acquired 21,815 shares of the company's $5 par common stock.

Alfred Smart, of Chicago, an officer and director, sold 1,500 common shares of Esquire-Coronet, Inc.

Queen Mary Brings $2,985,000 Gold

New York, March 21 (AP).—The S. S. Queen Mary arrived today with 40 iron-bound boxes containing $2,985,000 of gold bars in her hold, the first gold to arrive here from London since last October.

It was the first consignment of "hot metal" to scurry here in the latest flight of foreign capital from abroad. Flaring of war threats in Central Europe last week as Germany absorbed Austria and cast a longing eye toward Czechoslovakia started fugitive funds moving toward Belgium, then London, and finally the "safer haven" of the United States.

Boston Wool Market.

Boston, March 21 (AP) (U.S. D. A.).—Trading in wool on the Boston market was slow today. Quotations on domestic wools, however, were steady to firm within ranges quoted at the close of last week. Graded French combing fine territory wools were quoted at 63@66 cents scoured basis. Bulk good French combing fine territory wools in original bags were quoted mostly 61@62@63 cents scoured basis, fair weights being reported available at prices on the low side of this range.

Bob Burns Says—

I often hear people talk about how wonderful it is to live in this modern age with the scientific conveniences but sometimes I think we ain't any better off than our forefathers were, as far as real happiness is concerned.

I knew an old fella who lived 'way back in the mountains and he was not only the happiest man I ever saw but the healthiest. Not long ago one of his sons sent him a radio and he's been poutin' ever since.

He says them announcers on those medicine shows make the medicine sound so attractive, he feels like he's missin' somethin' out of life!

Col. McMullen Wins New Trial On Fee Charge

Court of Appeals Sets Aside Conviction in Cuban Manganese Case.

The United States Court of Appeals, in a unanimous opinion, yesterday set aside the conviction of Col. Joseph I. McMullen, formerly attached to the office of the Judge Advocate General's Office of the War Department, who was convicted in District Court of accepting a fee from the Cuban-American Manganese Corporation while he had official status.

The court gave four reasons for the action. Chief Justice D. Lawrence Groner commented: "And so we are brought to feel that . . . the indictment is so vague, uncertain, and duplicatious in its terms . . . that the Government counsel . . . recognized the fact that neither theory was as clearly expressed as to be the only possible one presented and in the proof undertook to sustain either one of the two distinct theories of the case, each requiring different and distinct proof."

Variance in Check Proof.

The court found that Col. McMullen, through attorneys William E. Leahy and William J. Hughes, showed the check he received was paid in New York City, while the Government was attempting to show it was received and paid here, and that the judge's charge left the jury in doubt as to where the money was received.

Col. McMullen, it was shown, was on sick leave and while thus off active duty became a member of a law firm. While he was thus engaged, he accepted the money from the Cuban-American Co., which was fighting an excise tax of 1 cent a pound on the importation of manganese ore into the United States. At the time the code provided for free duty on the ore. Approached by a member of the firm, Col. McMullen accepted a retainer of $1,000 and a monthly fee of $250 to look after the interests of the Cuban firm.

Was Fined $1,000.

The chief question passed on yesterday was whether Col. McMullen received the money for the check in Washington or New York. If the latter, the District would have no jurisdiction.

Col. McMullen was ordered to pay a fine of $1,000 and serve six months in jail following his conviction.

The order for a new trial directs the Government to specify where the money alleged to have been paid was received. The check, it was shown, was deposited here, but was drawn on a New York bank.

Jury Can't Agree In Homicide Case

For the third time in two weeks, a coroner's jury yesterday failed to reach a verdict fter an inquiry into a homicide case.

Yesterday's investigation was in connection with the fatal stabbing Saturday morning of John A. Metcalf, 30-year-old baker, of 6230 Georgia avenue northwest.

The jury deliberated more than two hours before announcing the deadlock. Their inability to agree automatically released from custody William E. Odum, colored, 23, 1912 New Hampshire avenue northwest.

Odum was rearrested immediately by Detective Sergt. Aubrey M. Tolson and sent to the District Jail. Tolso nsaid he would present the facts in the case to the grand jury this morning. Meanwhile, a murder charge was lodged against the man at the Sixth Police Precinct.

G. W. University Alters Schedule

Changes in the academic and summer sessions calendar of George Washington University, effective this year, were announced yesterday by school officials.

In the future the university will open the last week of September instead of the third week. Commencement will fall in the third instead of the second week in June. Thus, the academic year 1938-1939 will begin September 28 and commencement will be June 14, 1939.

The nine-week summer session will begin June 20, one week later than in previous years. The six-week courses will open one week earlier than in previous years; this summer, on June 27. The law school this summer will open on the former schedule, June 12, but in subsequent years will begin one week later.

D. C. Tax Perils Ten-Cent Beer, Brewers Warn

2d Group of Business Men From Baltimore Make Protest in House.

Spokesmen for Baltimore brewers who supply Washingtonians with much of their beer, yesterday told the House sub-committee on fiscal affairs that the proposed District levy of $1 a barrel would force an increase in the retail price.

Only a few weeks ago another group of Baltimore business men appeared before the sub-committee in opposiion to the District business privilege tax bceause it was applied to the income levy they received from the District.

The brewers were supported yesterday by Representatives Palmisano and Kennedy, both Baltimore Democrats and members of the House District Committee.

Led by Samuel Hoffberger, of the National Brewing Co., the brewers said that higher labor costs plus a steeper license fee, would prevent Washington dealers from continuing the sale of beer at 10 cents a glass if the tax is imposed.

The Wishington side of the protest against the proposed doubling of the liquor tax of 50 cents a gallon was presented by spokesmen for the Alcoholic Beverage Association.

Milton Kronheim, president, and Manuel J. Davis and J. Joseph Donhue, counsel, told the sub-committee that the tax would defeat the purpose of the bill by actually reducing the revenue derived from liquor sales.

"Dealers will be driven out of business, as consumers will go to nearby Maryland and Virginia because of the price differential brought on by the higher District taxes," Kronheim said.

He pointed out that this eventuality would result in the loss of license fees, as well as the gallon tax, and in loss of real estate taxes as stores were forced to close. In addition, he said, many persons would be thrown out of employment by the closing of on-sale and off-sale liquor shops.

The sub-committee will meet again today in an effort to complete work on the revenue bill, but indications are that the bill will not be ready for the House District Committee meeting tomorrow or the next District day, March 28.

Contract

By Mrs. Ely Culbertson

IT is one thing to know how to manage a suit in order to avoid losing more than one trick; it is quite another matter to fit in this knowledge with the exigencies of a general situation. The declarer in today's hand had learned one lesson too well.

North, dealer.
Neither side vulnerable.

	♠ K 6 4 ♡ 10 9 7 3 2 ◇ K 9 ♣ A 8 7
♠ J 10 8 3 ♡ K 5 ◇ J 8 6 2 ♣ K 9 5	North West East South	♠ A 7 2 ♡ Q 6 ◇ 10 4 3 ♣ Q J 6 3 2
	♠ Q 9 5 ♡ A J 8 4 ◇ A Q 7 5 ♣ 10 4

North	East	South	West
Pass	Pass	1 ♡	Pass
3 ♡	Pass	4 ♡	Pass
Pass	Pass

North's three-heart bid was correct.

West opened the spade jack, dummy played low, East signaled with the seven-spot, and declarer won. Now, to guard against two spade losers, declarer led low to the diamond king, then back to the ace and queen; discarding a spade from dummy. He then led a fourth diamond and permitted West's jack to hold the trick, since he figured he might as well throw away dummy's remaining spade.

East discarded the spade deuce on the fourth diamond. West, on lead with the diamond jack, found the only defense that gave his side a chance, although that chance depended on a misplay by declarer. West returned a spade. Declarer ruffed, and East's ace fell. Now, declarer wiped out his previous good work by his wooden handling of the trump situation. He knew that the correct way to play such a trump suit is to take successive finesses—that this guards against finding both honors guarded in the East hand, and loses only to the king-queen blank in the West hand. But this correct procedure applies only when outside factors are favorable. In this particular case, South should have realized that it would be fatal to let West on lead immediately.

Thus, the normal procedure for handling the trump suit to the best advantage should have been ignored in favor of getting out the trumps as rapidly as possible. Instead of finessing, as declarer actually did (intending to return to the club ace and finesse again), he should have led to the ace and returned a second round, in the hope that he would either drop the two honors together or that he would capture a singleton honor with the ace.
